The cattle buying and killing program by the Government helped. The drought also assisted in keeping up the price. But I predict that when production in this country gets back to normal that you will see a great reduction in prices if the terms of the present Canadian agreement are retained and enforced.

So I have taken these few minutes to give you some official figures and also to indulge the hope that those of you from cattle districts will join with me in presenting the true picture to the President and State Department in order that any injustice may be corrected. I have no doubt of favorable action when the problem of the livestock industry is thoroughly studied and understood. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, by direction of the chairman of the committee, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CURLEY].

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Chairman, in my humble judgment, the Reciprocal Trade Agreement Act should be extended. Notwithstanding the fact it has only been in operation for 3 years it has proven itself a useful agency in our Nation's effort to bring about harmony, peace, and happiness into a tired, nerve-shattered world market through the substitution of common sense for unbridled and unwarranted criticism by our political enemies. Unless the Congress extends this constructive measure it will expire in June this year. It has only been in effect since June 12, 1934.

When our Republican critics complain and protest against the Reciprocal Trade Agreement Act extension, and demand to know why the administration did not repeal the Republican Hawley-Smoot tariff law instead, it should be remembered the scars and wounds inflicted by the Fordney-McCumber Act under the Harding Republican administration and again under the Hoover Hawley-Smoot Tariff Act after 12 long years in operation, required a delicate diplomatic manipulation of that thing known as reason and common sense by that real statesmanship employed by the head of our efficient Department of State.

ROOSEVELT TRUSTEE AMERICAN DESTINY

In the fall of 1932 twenty-two million American citizens placed their destinies in the hands of President Roosevelt. Last November twenty-seven million American citizens went to the polls and registered their unqualified approval of his humane administration. As a matter of record 46 out of 48 States in the Nation recognized him as one of our greatest American statesmen in history. Why? Because he recognized the fundamental principle that sovereignty still resides with all the people and not special privileged groups of them; and he proved to their complete satisfaction that he has restored our Government as the servant and not the master of the people. That I believe to be a fitting answer to the reactionary Republican opponents to this resolution who thrived under special privilege in previous Republican administrations and bartered and traded away the economic birthrights of the 48 States of the Union—the right to regulate and control unfair monopolies and big business in general. Out of the maze of unbridled criticism unleashed by these critics, and notwithstanding the stinging rebuke at the polls, they fail to see "the handwriting on the wall" and as a result have reached the vanishing point in the political life of our great American Nation. President Roosevelt has proved his case with concrete human records that are convincing. After 4 long months of intense debate of the vital questions at issue in the campaign last fall he marched triumphantly through every conceivable form of attack, in the worst mud-slinging spree ever known in the history of a campaign.

LET US LOOK AT THE RECORD

So long as our friendly enemies on the Republican side of the House are looking for the sordid facts of this dark history of the gloomy days of 1929 to 1933, let us "look at the record" as it is the custom to say by those seeking truth. And here it is. From 1929 to 1932 the total foreign trade of the United States dropped from $9,641,000,000 to $2,934,000,000. In 1929 the United States share in the world trade was 13.8 percent. In 1933 it declined to 9.9 percent. By passage and enforcement of the Republican Hawley-Smoot Tariff Act in 1930 the doors of friendly foreign markets were closed to American exports, because the foreign nations affected immediately placed heavy embargoes against American goods. There you have the story, and from the record.

HIGH PROTECTIVE TARIFF RUINOUS

So you see American foreign trade was destroyed by the vicious inhuman operation of the Republican Hawley-Smoot Tariff Act. The United States used to pay debts to her creditors when she was a debtor nation in goods in settlement of her obligations held in foreign countries. The amount this country paid to Europe in interest and services exceeded $500,000,000 a year, a large part of which was paid in farm products. We had a steady market for our products in foreign countries because we owed them money and when they were glad to take our goods in payment. But by the time the war was over we had paid our debts to the foreign nations, and instead of owing the world the world owed us.

REPUBLICAN FALLACY

So that now the shoe is on the other foot. Foreign countries owe us such a tremendous debt it is said to be an economic impossibility to pay us in cash. The only way that could be done was to repay us as we paid them years ago in goods; the method we followed before the war. However, after war and since the Republican administrations made it difficult or impossible for our debtor nations to pay anything on accounts due to us, because they raised the tariff barriers higher and higher against them. The Fordney-McCumber Act lifted the rates under the Harding Republican administration and the Hawley-Smoot Act boosted them sky high during the Hoover Republican regime. These acts, which were contrary to all economic reason and common sense, were regarded by war-ravaged foreign countries, who were anxious and eager to rehabilitate themselves by the means of trade, as affronts. Secretary Wallace said:

That for a creditor nation to raise its tariff and thus destroy its export agriculture as this Nation began to do in 1922 was insanity.

These Republican tariff measures therefore actually meant that the United States, the great creditor nation, refused to accept payment of foreign debts in anything but cash. This was exactly like a village grocer to whom a farmer was indebted demanding payment in cash on account and declining to accept potatoes or eggs or butter. The farmer would naturally be incensed at the grocer; and so the foreign countries also were irritated and made angry by the United States in the attitude taken by the Republican administrations.

FOREIGN COUNTRIES RETALIATE

It followed as a natural sequence that the angry foreign debtor nations set up substantial policies in retaliation. As reprisals and in resentment against our Republican tariff policy, they raised their own tariffs. They did much more than that. They initiated systems of exchange controls, licenses, quotas, and even embargoes to such a wide extent as to completely strangle the world trade.

UNITED STATES TRADE SUFFERS

Inasmuch as the United States must have an outlet for its surplus consumption in the foreign markets, it suffered tremendous financial losses on account of the retaliatory foreign prohibitive tariffs brought on through Republican high protective tariff. The actual financial loss to our American Nation was two-thirds of its foreign trade, which, in terms of cash, meant the enormous sum of $6,000,000,000. Charge this to the Fordney-McCumber and Hawley-Smoot Tariff Acts.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT RESCUES THE NATION

In 1933, on March 4, President Roosevelt took his oath of office. In addition to a Republican national deficit in our Treasury of $3,068,000,000 placed in his lap, he quickly sensed the foreign situation. He went to work at it immediately. In his inaugural address President Roosevelt said:

I will make every possible effort to restore world trade by international economic readjustment and especially by a good-neighbor policy.

This meant a policy of fair dealing and the improvement of our political and economic relations with other countries.

RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS ACT PASSED

President Roosevelt's Democratic administration went into action at once. Through his recommendation to Congress, that body passed the Trade Agreements Act of June 12, 1934. It authorized the President to modify existing rates of duty by not more than 50 percent. Because of this vested power to adjust rates to suit special conditions, it was made possible to make reciprocal concessions to foreign countries who, in turn, made reductions in their trade barriers.

THE PURPOSE OF TRADE AGREEMENTS

The purpose of the act was to expand the foreign markets for the exportation of the goods of the United States, at the same time removing obstruction to freer movement of world trade which benefited all countries. Fifteen trade agreements have been consummated. These treaties have started the restoration of our foreign markets. The immediate effect of the agreements negotiated under the authority of the act is the apparent stimulation of the foreign trade.

FOREIGN COMMERCE INCREASES

Under the Trade Agreements Act our Government is pursuing a course of cooperation and fair dealing by treating others as you expect them to treat you and improving the condition of all instead of seeking exclusive privileges at the expense of others. By making world trade healthy as a whole, individual nations permanently will prosper.

GOOD WILL FOR THE GOOD NEIGHBOR

The good will which was present at the negotiations of all the trade agreements and the willingness of foreign countries to join with our human efforts to promote the welfare of the world brought mutual advantage to each of the nations. In fact, our foreign commerce has increased from 27 percent of the 1923–25 average normal in March 1933 to 57 percent of normal in April 1936, or, in other words, from $2,934,000,000 in 1932 to $4,329,000,000 in 1935. In the final analysis all of these foregoing human factors prove that the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act did a mighty swell job for the American people, and especially the large group of our unemployed, which benefited to a marked degree through the increase of employment of labor. This good-neighbor policy will help materially to keep our country and others out of war. We should extend the life of the act. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON].

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I am in full sympathy with the position taken by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON], but I cannot understand how the gentleman can bring himself to vote for a renewal of this iniquitous reciprocal trade law in view of the detrimental effect it has had upon the greatest industry in his district, cattle.

Trade agreements should be mutually beneficial, and I know of none that have been negotiated to date that meet that standard. I know of no treaty entered into that has even given us an even break.

OUR TARIFF RATES SHOULD NOT BE REDUCED BELOW DIFFERENCE IN AMERICAN AND FOREIGN PRODUCTION COSTS

The Republicans, whom the preceding speaker so severely castigated, take the position that all trade agreements should be based upon domestic production costs. How can we compete with Argentina and Canada in cattle? How can we compete with New Zealand in the production of butter, or with China on eggs? Over there the cattle are out on green grass 12 months of the year, while in this country we have to feed them 5, 6, or 7 months indoors. How can we compete with the low-priced labor of Asia and Russia and portions of South America?

I have yet to hear one who can justify, at least to my satisfaction, a commercial trade agreement that does not take into consideration the production costs in this country. We have got to come to this, Mr. Chairman, if we are to maintain American living standards and American wages.

FAVORABLE TRADE BALANCE DISAPPEARING UNDER ADMINISTRATION'S PROGRAM

Some of those who have spoken on behalf of a renewal of this law have sought to tell us how beneficial it is. As the gentleman from New York, the preceding speaker, said, let us look at the record. In 1934, when the act became effective, we had a favorable trade balance of $478,000,000. In 1935 this had shrunk to $235,000,000, and last year it was only $34,000,000. At this rate, 1937 is going to show millions and millions of dollars in the red. Do you call this good business?

I do not see how any man or woman on this floor can justify the continuance of the trade-agreement law as it is now being operated. Why not be practical? Why not negotiate trade agreements that deal with noncompetitive articles and articles of which we do not produce enough in our own country?

ADMINISTRATION IS GIVING AWAY THE AMERICAN MARKET

In negotiating the trade agreement with Brazil we very foolishly, as I think, agreed to freeze babassu nuts and babassu oil on the free list, and also agreed to reduce the tariff on manganese ore from 1 cent to one-half cent a pound, notwithstanding the fact that we buy nearly $100,000,000 worth from Brazil annually and they buy less than $50,000,000 worth from us; yet we made them these great concessions to the hurt of the American farmer.

I sometimes wonder just what the people down in the State Department can be thinking about when they negotiate trade agreements that are rapidly giving the American market to the foreign producer.

The Republicans take the position that while they are in favor of reciprocal-trade agreements, such agreements should be based on the cost of production here in the United States, so that we may maintain American living standards and American wages; and we will go to the country on that issue. [Applause.]

How are our farmers going to be able to meet their obligations if they do not receive cost of production plus a fair profit? That is all that my amendment proposes, and I call upon all Representatives from agricultural districts to support my amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. LEMKE].

Mr. LEMKE. Mr. Chairman, in 1934 I opposed the bill giving to the President sole authority to enter into trade agreements with foreign nations because of apprehensions. I felt then that the so-called reciprocal-trade agreements bill was unconstitutional. The Constitution provides that the President—

> Shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, providing two-thirds of the Senators present concur * * *.

The bill gave the President the right, by agreements with foreign nations, to reduce tariffs fifty percent. It attempts to take the power to advise and consent from the Senate and lodge the entire power with the President. I stated at that time on the floor that the result of passing the bill would be that our domestic agricultural markets would be traded or sold to foreign nations.

I now oppose the resolution extending for a period of 3 years the provisions of that bill and continuing the sole authority in the hands of the President—the power to reduce tariffs 50 percent—because my apprehensions have been confirmed. The domestic agricultural markets of this Nation have to a large extent been bartered away or sold to foreign nations.

The so-called reciprocal-trade agreements made under the provisions of this act would never have been entered into if the advice and consent of the Senators had been required. They have been entered into by the Secretary of State secretly and in star-chamber proceedings with foreign diplomats. No real opportunity to protest was afforded those who were opposed to trading away the American domestic markets to other nations in exchange for foreign importations.

A trade agreement is a treaty, and any attempt to deprive the Senate of the power to advise and consent to such an agreement is in violation of the plain English language of the Constitution. Even if we should attempt to ignore the plain mandate of the Constitution, I doubt the wisdom of this kind of legislation. I do not believe it will serve the best interest of the American people. After all, the 96 Senators, coming from 48 States, are in a better position to protect and safeguard the people of this entire Nation than is the President, who comes from one State—from a State whose industrial life largely depends upon and is devoted to trading in international merchandise and international finance.

The tariff in all of these agreements has been reduced at the expense of the American farmer and the American laborer. The American domestic market has been opened to the peasants, serfs, and peons of other lands. The products of the tropics have been substituted for those of our temperate zone. We were told that the people knew nothing about the tariff—that their chosen representatives in Congress would not act as wisely as the President and the Secretary of State.

Our experience now convinces us that the people knew how to better protect their domestic markets than the Secretary of State. We now know that Congress more truly reflects the sentiment of the people and more truly protects their interest, than does the executive branch of the Government.

The law, giving to the President the sole power of entering into reciprocal trade agremeents with foreign nations, was passed in 1934 largely because the American Manufacturers Export Association, financed by the Chase and City National Banks of New York and by the international manufacturers, such as General Motors, the International Harvester Co., and others, through a well-organized lobby and publicity machine, succeeded in misleading the majority in Congress. These international bankers and manufacturers are more interested in their own selfish gain than in the welfare of this Nation.

Under this policy our Department of Agriculture is still engaged in destroying and restricting American agricultural production in the midst of hunger, want, and rags. That Department still believes that we should sell our agricultural markets to foreign nations so as "to service the foreign debt." It still believes that there is overproduction, while every intelligent person knows that our problem is underconsumption and maldistribution—that in fact there is a scarcity. There never was overproduction, but there have been overimportations. The trouble is that we are getting altogether too internationally minded. We are suffering with an inferior foreign complex.

While our Department of Agriculture talks about overproduction and of servicing the foreign debt and curtailing our people from producing all the things we need, the Department of State has been busy selling the farmer and laborer in foreign market places. That Department is still seeking foreign concessions—still chasing the illusive rainbow, the will-o'-the-wisp of international trade. It is selling our domestic agricultural markets to foreign horse traders.

This is done by means of the so-called reciprocal-trade agreements. These agreements are largely suggested by the international bankers, who gambled and speculated in foreign debts and who now desire that the American people should pay their foreign investments indirectly. These agreements are also suggested by the international manufacturers, who wish to sell their manufactured products to foreign people at the expense of American agriculture and labor. So that under this policy we have one department of Government engaged in curtailing American production and the other one entering into trade agreements with other nations, trading our domestic markets for the benefit of a few international bankers and manufacturers, entering into agreements in which the best interests of this Nation and its people are entirely forgotten.

As a result of this un-American policy our country is now being flooded with foreign agricultural and manufactured products as never before in its history, products produced and manufactured in foreign countries, with the lowest possible standard of living. At present we have restricted the immigration of European races in order to protect our American standard of living. But now we import, under trade agreements and otherwise, hundreds of millions of dollars worth of manufactured articles from Asiatic nations, articles produced by human slavery and human misery. We exclude the Asiatic because of his low standard of living, and at the same time we permit the articles that his labor produces under unsanitary, brutal, and inhuman conditions to be sold in competition with articles manufactured by labor under the American standard of living. In fact, by importing these goods we invite, we import, the oriental, the lowest standard of living, for Americans.

We still have millions on Federal relief and millions more out of employment, and yet we import the very things that these men and women should be producing under an American standard of living—not under an Asiatic standard. Why prevent our own people, who are in want and misery, from producing and manufacturing these articles in order to enrich a few importers and international dealers? We submit that this is the work of madmen. It is the work of men who know not what they are doing and do not understand or know the foundation upon which the greatness of this Nation was built. It is the work of bureaucrats who lack vision and of incompetents. We challenge not only the fallacy of this policy but we challenge its continuation.

An examination of the reports of the Department of Commerce shows that in 1935 our imports in the first six groups of commodities, which include those of farm origin, were as follows:

General imports of merchandise by articles, 1935

Animals and animal products:
Edible	$74,708,519
Inedible	151,127,431
Vegetable food products and beverages	566,440,855
Vegetable products, inedible (except fibers and wood)	282,121,473
Fibers and textiles	306,701,119
Wood and paper (we consider these agricultural products)	208,343,001
Total	1,589,442,398

For the sake of argument let us deduct the large items which we cannot produce at home to advantage—although rayon, an American product, could and should be substituted for silk. The more obvious ones are:

General imports, 1935

Silk, unmanufactured	$96,678,897
Silk, manufactures of	7,503,018
Bananas	28,034,426
Rubber and manufactures of	122,307,405
Spices of all kinds	10,554,886
Coffee, tea, and cocoa	180,992,684
Total	446,071,280
Add for good measure for miscellaneous products	20,000,000
Grand total	466,071,280

This still leaves the value of the net balance of imports of products of agricultural origin at $1,123,371,118. When we take the average of all cultivated farm lands we find that the farmers do not average more than $15 an acre for their products. It would require 74,891,408 acres additional cultivated lands to produce the $1,123,371,118 worth of farm products imported over and above products which we can, but which we do not now produce.

These products, such as coffee, tea, cocoa, bananas, rubber, silk, and miscellaneous products up to $20,000,000, we are willing to give to the Secretary of State as trading stock in entering into trade agreements with foreign diplomats. But we do strenuously object to short-changing the farmers of this Nation by importing $1,123,371,118, through trade agreements or otherwise, of products that they have, can, and ought to continue to produce. We believe that our domestic markets belong to our people as long as they are capable of producing commodities with which to supply them.

Among the important agricultural products which we imported in 1935 we find 364,623 head of cattle and about 34,000 head of hogs. We also imported 115,159,124 pounds of meat and meat products and 18,895,241 pounds of edible animal oils and fats. All these should have been produced by the American farmer and he should have received the money that we paid to foreigners. In addition we imported 324,700,032 pounds of fish to compete with the farmers' meat products and with the fish produced by our own countrymen.

Next we come to dairy products, of which we imported $17,870,036 worth, consisting of 22,674,642 pounds of butter and 48,932,643 pounds of cheese, together with milk, eggs, and poultry. Not satisfied with that, we imported 303,475,633 pounds of raw hides and skins, valued at $45,576,877, and in addition we imported $8,168,049 worth of leather, practically all of which our own farmers could have and should have produced.

Then we imported in 1935, 43,242,246 bushels of corn, 10,106,903 bushels of oats and large amounts of barley, buckwheat, rye, rice, and wheat, amounting in all to $73,313,894. In addition we imported hay and other livestock feed from foreign countries, while all the time our Department of Agriculture was talking and dreaming of overproduction, destroying farm commodities, and prohibiting the farmers from producing the very things that we were importing. This is internationalism and national stupidity gone on a rampage.

Coming now to 1936 we find, from an examination of the reports of the Department of Commerce, that our imports in the first six groups of commodities, which include those of farm origin, were as follows:

General imports of merchandise, by articles, 1936

Animals and animal products, edible	$89,086,713
Animals and animal products, inedible	190,793,117
Vegetable food products and beverages	$643,249,311
Vegetable products, inedible (except fibers and wood)	337,701,507
Fibers and textiles	386,894,993
Wood and paper (we consider these agricultural products)	249,354,476
Total	1,897,080,107

Again, for the sake of argument, let us deduct the large items which we cannot produce at home to advantage—although rayon and other American products could, and should, be substituted for silk. The more obvious ones are:

General imports, 1936

Silk, unmanufactured	$104,163,491
Silk, manufactures of	8,520,763
Bananas	58,302,375
Rubber, and manufactures of	163,024,918
Spices of all kinds	12,526,555
Coffee, tea, and cocoa	183,338,552
Total	531,876,954
Again add for good measure, for miscellaneous products	20,000,000
Grand total	551,876,954

This leaves $1,345,203,143 worth of commodities that we imported that our own farmers ought to have produced in 1936. Again, when we take the $15 an acre, the average that the farmers receive for their products throughout the Nation, we find that in 1936 it would have required 89,680,210 acres of additional cultivated lands to have produced the things that we imported. Yet, at the same time, the farmers are told to permit their land to lie idle and pay taxes on it, so that we can import these products from foreign nations that already owe us $26,000,000,000 and refuse to pay.

Among the importations for 1936 we find 399,113 head of cattle. Assuming that the average hog weighs 100 pounds, we find 174,464 head of hogs, 29,808 turkeys, and, in addition, 152,458,645 pounds of meat and meat products, of which amount 86,919,668 pounds is mostly canned beef. We also find 26,087,850 pounds of ham and bacon and 371,205,567 pounds of foreign fish. All of these meat products and fish compete directly with the American farmer and stockman. All of these meat products should have been produced by our own farmers and the fish should have been caught by our own fishermen.

May I call your attention to the fact that you cannot go into any store in the United States and find a single can of corned beef that was manufactured and packed in this country, unless it is some of the meat canned from the cattle in drought-stricken areas for people on relief.

Look under the key, and you will find, "Inspected by the Argentine Department of Agriculture." If you do not find these words there, then turn it upside down, and you will find, "Paraguay" or "Uruguay" on the bottom of the can. What part of the United States is Paraguay, Uruguay, or the Argentine? The beef packed into these cans is bought at less than 1 cent a pound in Paraguay, Uruguay, and the Argentine. The reason that it can be bought so cheaply is because peon labor can be had to take care of the cattle for as low as 25 cents a week. This meat is then brought into the United States and sold in competition with that produced by the American farmer and the American laborer.

This is not all; in addition we imported $16,102,954 worth of dairy products, consisting of milk, butter, and cheese, and then, to compete with the farmer's wife, we imported $3,298,597 worth of poultry products.

These importations of agricultural products are made possible, not only under the so-called reciprocal-trade agreements but are aided by another bill passed at the same time that the bill here under consideration was passed. It is a bill creating free zones in our country at important ports of entry where the foreign nations can store their agricultural and manufactured products within our borders for one year without paying any duty and thus putting our foreign competitors in a position to flood our markets with their products at the opportune moment. That is, we permit the American farmer to feed our Nation when the prices are too low for foreigners, but when the prices rise they can dump on the market the goods which they have stored in the warehouses in the free zones.

Again, during 1936 we imported 310,483,593 pounds of hides and skins valued at $54,770,201. We imported $17,437,808 worth of leather and leather products, animal oils, and fats to the extent of $9,540,670, the large part of which was tallow. Why were not our own farmers and laboring people permitted to produce these articles for us? Let those who sponsor these reciprocal-trade agreements and free zones answer.

In 1936 we again imported grain and grain products to the extent of $84,468,003, hay and feed to the extent of $12,255,292, vegetables valued at $20,122,776, oil seeds to the extent of $37,629,964, of which 15,365,020 bushels was flax. Then we imported vegetable oils to the extent of $67,580,677 and tobacco to the extent of $32,925,271. What is the matter with our own tobacco growers? Are they not able to produce enough tobacco for home consumption?

Among other important articles that we imported in 1936 we find $81,607,695 worth of fur and fur manufactures, 59,848,896 pounds of cheese, 52,980,016 bushels of wheat, 31,770,923 bushels of corn, 8,143,632 bushels of barley, 301,767,154 pounds of barley malt, and 59,987,760 pounds of canned tomatoes.

Then we come to cotton and cotton manufactures, and find we imported $60,620,335 worth and, in addition, we imported $61,781,114 worth of wool and mohair and manufactures.

Now, let us take up wood manufactures and sawmill products, and we find that we imported in 1936, $34,968,097 worth, and paper stock and pulpwood to the extent of $218,513,856 worth. Why was not this woodstock and wood pulp furnished and manufactured by our own people? Last, but not least, we find that in 1935 we imported $147,087,763 worth of sugar, and in 1936 we imported $110,540,356 worth, and at the same time we have the Department of Agriculture restricting the production of beet sugar and cane sugar.

The fruit farmers are in the same predicament. We imported, in 1936, $41,333,240 worth of fruit and fruit preparations, all of which could have and should have been produced in our own orchards.

To make the picture complete, in 1936 we imported $77,549,099 worth of foreign liquor. While I do not use the stuff at all and I would advise my friends to refrain from using it, if they must use it then I would advise American booze. It will give you just as good a headache as any foreign booze ever did or ever will. I especially recommend the American brand to the Department of Agriculture and the Department of State.

The statement has been made on this floor that our foreign imports are but a small part of our total commerce. That is true, but that statement is incorrect and misleading when applied to agricultural products. As I have stated heretofore, under these trade agreements our domestic agricultural market is being sold in foreign market places in order to favor the international bankers and manufacturers. In other words, the American farmer is being short-changed and sold in foreign market places to favor the privileged few—the Chase and City National Banks, the Ford and General Motors companies, and other international manufacturers and bankers.

According to the World Almanac of 1937, page 353, the gross cash income from all the farms in the United States in 1934 was $6,227,000,000 and the net income was $3,467,000,000. In 1935 the gross cash income was $7,201,000,000 and the net cash income was $4,538,000,000, and yet we imported in 1935, $1,123,371,118 and in 1936, $1,345,203,143 worth of agricultural products that our farmers could have and should have produced.

The value of these commodities is the foreign value. The value in our own country is at least one-fourth more. From this we can see that the value of the agricultural products imported into this country, which should have been produced by our own farmers, amounts to more than one-fifth of the entire farm income and amounts to about one-sixth of the cash gross income.

Thus we see that if our own farmers had produced these commodities, as they should have, and the proceeds of them had been equally distributed among the over 1,000,000 farm families of our Nation, then each family would have received at least $1,600 more during 1936. Compare that with the allotment checks they received before the triple A was held unconstitutional and then you will realize how our farmers have been sold in foreign market places.

It is self-evident that we cannot borrow or tax ourselves out of the depression, nor can we buy ourselves into prosperity by buying agricultural and manufactured products from other nations which our own people ought to and can produce. Everyone knows that we cannot satisfy hunger, want, and poverty by scarcity. We cannot restrict or destroy ourselves into recovery.

Neither can we gain anything by selling goods produced or manufactured by our own people on credit to bankrupt nations that already owe us $26,000,000,000, and that have refused and have no intention of ever paying. Such a stupid policy will not bring recovery, but will bring devastation and destruction.

A farmer who is capable of producing all he needs but who persists in destroying and restricting his production to part of his needs, and then sells on credit what he produces to a bankrupt neighbor and buys for cash what he needs from that same neighbor will ultimately himself become a bankrupt. A manufacturer that has all the material and equipment to supply his own wants, but who buys part of the things that he is equipped to and ought to manufacture himself, and then sells his own products on credit to a bankrupt concern will in turn become a bankrupt.

Likewise a nation that destroys and restricts production so that it may buy from foreign and bankrupt nations, and then insists on selling its own products to those same nations on credit will in the end become a bankrupt. In other words, a nation that insists upon buying products which its own people can and should produce and then sells its own labor and natural resources on credit to other nations who already owe more than they are able to pay cannot long succeed. Neither can it maintain a high standard of living when it forces its people to compete with the low standard of orientals.

I repeat, the American farmer, manufacturer, and laborer cannot compete with the serf, peon, or oriental laborer of foreign countries that is satisfied with a bowl of rice, and who manages to get by without shoes, covers his body with about 50 cents worth of rags, and lives under the most insanitary conditions. We maintain that our American standard requires us to eat, drink, wear, and buy American products—America for Americans.

In this I accept the example and advice of George Washington, who at his inaugural address wore homespun, and who in his Farewell Address advised us to avoid foreign entanglements.

This $2,468,574,261 which we paid to foreign farmers and producers in place of our own spent at home and used as a revolving fund would give many billions of dollars of purchasing power. That purchasing power would have resulted in a larger demand for manufactured articles. Why should we give this purchasing power to foreign nations in order to satisfy the greed and grasping instinct of a few individuals? The fallacy of such a policy is so self-evident that we are sure the American people will not tolerate it once they know the facts.

It is time that we realized that money spent in America continues to be spent in America, and that money spent in foreign nations will continue to be spent in foreign nations. Our Federal Reserve Banking System and our Treasury Department by giving credit to foreign nations are in fact financing foreign competitors to sell their products in this country. But this same Federal Reserve Banking System and this same Treasury Department have consistently refused to do for our people that which they are doing for foreigners. They have failed to finance agriculture and industry.

Let international trade take care of itself. It has meant nothing but humiliation and loss to us in the past. It has and may again mean war, Secretary of State Hull's hallucination to the contrary notwithstanding. War, not peace, has been the result of international trade and trade agreements. Let the Secretary of State try to collect the $26,000,000,000 that foreign nations owe us and he will have a war on his hands.

We have no objection to that part of the international trade that is the natural result of our civilization and of our intercourse among nations, that which comes to us naturally and necessarily. But why buy products produced in foreign nations that we can produce ourselves? Why make a laughing stock of ourselves and trade away our domestic markets so that a few international manufacturers may sell a few more automobiles, machinery, and electrical equipment in foreign nations on credit—all at the ultimate expense of this Nation. Our international trade has not added to the benefit or wealth of our people. In fact, it has sapped our resources to the tune of $26,000,000,000.

The United States, because of its great natural wealth and unlimited resources of raw material, has become self-sufficient and is able to develop economic freedom for all. It can, and must, abolish poverty, not by mingling it with the poverty of other nations but by an ever increasing and higher standard of living, not of the few but of the many. This Nation need no longer concern itself with international shopkeeping. It will, of course, trade with its friends, for friendship's sake, as far as essential and necessary for their mutual well-being, but it will not drive bargains or sell part of its people in foreign market places.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEMKE. Yes.

Mr. WOOD. How does the amount of beef and cattle and tobacco imported into this country in 1934, 1935, and 1936 compare with the amount imported prior to 1932?

Mr. LEMKE. I would say that it is about three or four times as large. I have looked it up, but I have not the exact figures, but I can get them for the gentleman.

Mr. WOOD. How does the price of beef or the price of livestock and tobacco upon the open markets now compare with the price received in 1932?

Mr. LEMKE. Let us go back to 1928, if we want to make a fair comparison, or let us make a comparison between 1934 and 1932.

In 1932 at Yankton, S. Dak., I could have bought a 12-pound goose for 48 cents, and I could make other similar comparisons. Of course, we can pay these foreigners high prices if we restrict and destroy our own products, but I want the American laborer and the farmer to get those high prices, and not foreigners.

Mr. WOOD. The gentleman said that he could buy a goose for 48 cents.

Mr. LEMKE. Yes; in December 1934.

Mr. WOOD. What could you buy that goose for in 1931 and 1932?

Mr. LEMKE. About the same price.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEMKE. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman who was interrogating the speaker overlooks the fact that we have had two droughts, one in 1934 and another in 1936, which have absolutely done away with all kinds of surpluses, and created an artificial price all along the line.

Mr. LEMKE. Yes, and further, we assassinated millions of pigs, and imported 174,000 in 1936, that the American farmers could and should have produced.

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEMKE. Yes.

Mr. KITCHENS. Did we export or have we been exporting any meat to friendly trade countries in the last 3 or 4 years?

Mr. LEMKE. We always have exported some, but not so much in the last 3 or 4 years.

Mr. KITCHENS. Have we exported any beef cattle?

Mr. LEMKE. Only for breeding purposes, as far as I know. Last year when the drought was on, when the Department of Agriculture advised farmers in the drought-stricken districts to sell their cattle, and when those cattle were shipped into South St. Paul in trainload lots, they came into competition with trainload lots of cattle from Canada. Then the Department of Agriculture used the taxpayers' money to buy cattle on South St. Paul and other key markets in the United States to keep the price up. Between August 5, 1936, and September 28, 1936, the Secretary of Agriculture, under the provisions made in section 32 of Public, No. 320 of the Seventy-fourth Congress, purchased 3,663 head of cattle at the cost of $107,000. I have no objection to the Department of Agriculture keeping the price up, but I want the Secretary to keep the price up by buying American cattle and not Canadian cattle shipped in under trade agreements.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEMKE. Yes.

Mr. COLDEN. Is not the gentleman overlooking the corresponding value to the import value, and its help not only to agriculture but to industry?

Mr. LEMKE. I am not.

Mr. COLDEN. Particularly the fruits and products of California.

Mr. LEMKE. I am not, and I shall give the gentleman the figures. In 1936 we imported agricultural products, and that includes about $18,000,000 worth of nuts in competition with California nuts. I had though we had all the nuts in Washington, but I find I was mistaken.

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEMKE. Yes.

Mr. SOUTH. Can the gentleman tell us about how many cattle were involved in the Canadian agreement?

Mr. LEMKE. I cannot tell the exact figures, because the hearings are not public when these treaties are entered into, but the total amount of cattle that we imported in 1936 is 399,113.

Mr. SOUTH. Under the terms of the Canadian agreement we were to import at a reduction of 1 cent per pound 155,000 cattle, weighing above 700 pounds, and approximately 51,000 calves under 175 pounds. Does the gentleman know that in 1935, before we had any such agreement, there was imported into this country from Mexico and Canada 364,000 head of cattle, or 50 percent more than involved in the entire Canadian agreement?

Mr. LEMKE. That may all be true, but those importations have been made possible because we have permitted them to come in under the trade agreements and otherwise under this administration, and if we would give the farmer the cost of production and put an embargo on our foreign imports until that price was reached, we would get somewhere instead of preparing warehouses in which to store foreign commodities for foreigners to compete with our own producers.

Mr. SOUTH. But they did come in in 1935 when we did not have that agreement.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. LEMKE] has expired.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEMKE. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Referring to the question just asked by the gentleman from Texas, is it not a fact that in 1935 the limit that was imported into the United States from Canada was 159,993 head of cattle?

Mr. LEMKE. That is correct.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. And is it not a fact that under the quota system in 11 months of 1936 there were imported into this country 134,940 head of cattle?

Mr. LEMKE. That is a fact.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Is it not a fact, further, that 70 percent of the importations of Canadian cattle came into the St. Paul markets and the northwestern markets during the months of March, April, May, and June, to the almost utter destruction of the northwestern markets for the northwestern cattle producers of the United States?

Mr. LEMKE. That is correct. The Department of Agriculture had to step in and buy Canadian cattle to keep the price up.

We imported foreign goods in one year to the amount of approximately $2,500,000,000. This vast and incomprehensible sum, if it were equally distributed among the 125,000,000 people of this Nation, would mean $20 for every man, woman, and child. If this sum, which is paid to foreigners in one year, were distributed and used as a revolving fund, it would pay off many billions of the $300,000,000,000 public and private debt of this Nation.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Let the RECORD show the figures I am quoting are taken from the United States Tariff Commission in Washington.

Mr. LEMKE. The figures I have quoted are taken from reports of the Commerce Department and are undoubtedly correct. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has again expired.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER].

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, I had hoped to listen to some of the concluding arguments in favor of the bill, but I understand the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON] is to have the closing argument, so I shall only be an interested listener, with no opportunity to offer suggestions or criticisms.

Let me say, however, in passing that I feel the gentleman from Kentucky is eminently qualified. He is the ablest prosecutor on our committee. Even when he is sometimes slightly baffled he never retires in confusion. He always make a very graceful exit. [Laughter.] I presume he will do so today in closing the debate on this legislation.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROWTHER. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman is entitled to his own opinion, but he did use the word "persecutor."

Mr. CROWTHER. I shall be glad to withdraw that. [Laughter.]

Mr. McCORMACK. I was sure the gentleman would.

Mr. CROWTHER. Although some of the witnesses before the committee on various occasions have evidently come to the conclusion that they were being persecuted rather than interrogated.

Mr. McCORMACK. But "persecution" involves intent.

Mr. CROWTHER. I accept the gentleman's suggestion, because the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON] is a friend of mine, and I would not reflect upon him in any way. I have a great deal of admiration for his ability; also the gentleman from Massachusetts, who comes as near offending along the line of prosecution as his colleague. Some of the Members of this House sitting in committee sessions can never forget they were prosecuting attorneys at some time or other. [Laughter and applause.] Witnesses realize that many times. It may be that we have a few witnesses who require that sort of treatment, but I am not willing to admit it.

However, as I have stated, reciprocity is not a new subject from a Republican point of view. I mean by that, real reciprocity. We had a reciprocity act back in 1911. In a minority report that was submitted by John Dalzell, of Pennsylvania, a distinguished supporter of the policy of protective tar..f at that time, there was outlined three outstanding policies or principles regarding reciprocity from the Republican point of view.

First. "That products admitted to the United States must not compete with those produced by us." That, of course, is of the utmost importance.

Second. "The countries traded with must be such as would take our surplus of manufactures and of farm produce."

Third. "The concessions obtained by us must be fully equivalent in the volume of trade thereby gained to those made by countries with which the arrangements were entered into."

That, to my mind, expresses the Republican point of view as regards reciprocity. Of course, at that time there was not involved the question of the most-favored-nation clause that is involved under the present reciprocal trade agreement policy, which, by the way, in passing, I think is most unfair and unjustified, in view of the fact that many of the countries obtaining concessions are still discriminating against the Government of the United States.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROWTHER. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. BUCK. In the interest of accuracy, would the gentleman mind stating what nations who have received concessions, are still discriminating against the United States?

Mr. CROWTHER. We endeavored in the hearings to find that out, and the only answer we could get was from Assistant Secretary of State Sayre, that a great number of nations were still discriminating against the United States.

Mr. BUCK. But not on the rates. If the gentleman from New York will recall that statement, he will remember that it concerns only matters of quotas and various other conditions that were not involved in the reciprocal trade agreement programs.

Mr. CROWTHER. I appreciate the gentleman's viewpoint. I shall quote just a few lines from the statement of Dr. Sayre:

> I think our foreign trade is still crippled by innumerable trade barriers and discriminatory practices all over the world.

Mr. BUCK. Those, however, are not customs duties; and insofar as we have been entering into agreements with countries like France, we have been able to remove those.

Mr. CROWTHER. What is the difference between customs duties, quotas, agreements, and licensing provisions if they are all defined as trade barriers? What is the difference?

Mr. BUCK. There are only two countries in the world today that are actually discriminating against the United States—Germany and Australia.

Mr. CROWTHER. With all due deference to my colleague from California, I prefer to accept the statement of the Assistant Secretary of State, Dr. Sayre, who says they are innumerable. I know, of course, that the gentleman is very ardently espousing these reciprocal-trade agreements.

At the hearings the tariff commissioner, Mr. O'Brien, commented on the fact that there were so few Republicans on the Ways and Means Committee, and I told him that the real reason was because some people in this country, at the last election, sneered at the Constitution, disregarded discussion of governmental fundamentals, and decided to be for bigger and better Santa Clauses in the United States. The gentleman from California admitted that the California Santa Claus was this reciprocal-trade agreement they had, and that in payment therefor they had helped to deplete the Republican ranks. It was because they had their Santa Claus.

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROWTHER. No; I have only a limited amount of time.

We do not object, as I say, to real reciprocity; but we do not have real reciprocity under the present regime.

Then, again, the principal thing with which we differ is the modus operandi, the way they control the performance down here. I asked the Secretary of State if he did not think it was rather unusual. They have dubbed it a star-chamber proceeding, and perhaps that is the best description we could give. It is certainly true that the organization that listens to the appeal of the domestic manufacturers is not the group that finally enters into the trade treaties with the foreign representatives. I said to the Secretary of State that we had a great deal of publicity under the old method.

I have seen the Ways and Means Committee room crowded with a thousand people, people standing in rows around the room, and every chair occupied while the witnesses were giving their evidence. Twenty reporters were giving to the public through the newspapers every day every item that was under consideration, and the arguments pro and con. The most pitiless publicity was given to the description of the tariff bill and the preparation of it during the hearings. Then Mr. Hull, the present Secretary of State, said to me: Oh, yes; but then you went into executive session and nobody knew what you were doing."

That is true. That is the only way we could transact business; but when the Democrats passed the Underwood-Simmons bill they caucused in this Chamber for 5 or 6 days, considered every paragraph, and entered into an agreement not to allow an amendment to be made on the floor of the House. You will find that President Wilson came to this Chamber to consult with the leaders, came down to the Capitol to consult them, and did consult with them at that time. I printed the whole story in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD 2 years ago. I have no doubt the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] remembers something about it. He smiles a little. I think his memory carries him back to those days. He has been here for a long time but he has not yet reached the age of senility, 70. I rather hesitate to say anything today because I am rapidly approaching threescore years and ten, at which age men are now classed as in the sere and yellow leaf and no longer may have an opinion or express one.

And then in 1921 we had an emergency tariff bill to tide us over for the benefit of agriculture. My friend the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] is an ardent exponent of protection for agriculture and has been for a long period of years, and he well remembers that bill. From 1931 on the Democratic administration promised they would repeal the Smoot-Hawley bill. You attacked it with vituperation and sarcasm, but you did not have the guts to repeal or revise it. Henry Rainey stood on that floor and said: "What, repeal this bill! Our country would be flooded with cheap merchandise made by pauper labor in foreign countries and it would ruin us." He said that before he was Speaker of the House.

No; you did it by this method suggested by John Sharp Williams, many years ago, when he was Senator-elect from Mississippi but had not yet taken his seat. A few months before that he wrote an article on the tariff for one of the leading magazines, and this is what he said:

> There is also tariff reduction by piecemeal, which is the handmaiden of the other system. This is tariff revision by reciprocal-trade agreements with other nations. Much can be done along this line by this piecemeal method of tariff reduction under a Democratic, or approximately a Democratic, law.

Somebody must have found that by digging into the records of that period.

"We shall not have to repeal the Hawley-Smoot bill", said the Democrats; "we will whittle it away a little at a time with trade agreements"; and that is what you are doing today. We have 15 at the present time. By the time we have 20 or more in effect, the whole list of dutiable commodities will be involved, and there will be what Mr. Hull and the Democrats desire—a horizontal reduction in all the rates in the whole 15 schedules involved in the tariff law.

To credit trade agreements with a gain in foreign trade during the last few years, having reference to volume and dollar value, is materially and manifestly unfair. Not one iota of credit is given to improved world conditions any more than credit was given to the fact that when our depression occurred our foreign trade as a whole fell away, and the real reason was that the rest of the world had no more money to buy from us than we had to buy from them. Strange to say, during this period of 3 or 4 years the falling off was not in dutiable goods, but in goods that came into this country on the free list.

I would say that improved conditions have been continuously ignored by the proponents of this measure. No one knows, and we have no yardstick by which we can determine, what the measure of improvement would have been if we had not had these hypodermic injections of taxpayers' money, much of it unwisely spent through the alphabetical policies. No one can determine. There is nothing to measure it by. But, in my humble opinion, there would have been a very remarkable degree of improvement in this country under ordinary conditions, even if the Reciprocal Trade Treaty Act had not been in force.

After all, there is no certainty that foreign nations will trade with us. Business is cold-blooded. Nations buy wherever they can buy the cheapest and to the best advantage. The same is true with individuals. Businessmen deal with a house they may not like at all. They may not like its actions, or they may not like the owner or his policies, but it is of material advantage for them to trade with that particular house. No promise to buy from us is binding.

I asked Mr. Sayre this question:

> It seems to me that there is a thread running through of rather unjustifiable criticism of the Hawley-Smoot bill. For instance, nothing was said about the world depression that occurred following the 1929 crash. Is it not fair to say that the drop in foreign trade was in a very large measure due to the decreased purchasing power of the world? Is it fair to lay that all at the door of the Hawley-Smoot Act?

Mr. Sayre answered as follows:

> I think that is a fair question, sir. I will agree that the Hawley-Smoot bill is not the explanation of all the evils of the world. It is one factor, however, and I think it was a powerful factor, in intensifying the depression.

He stated further:

> But just at that juncture, when you had that depression, then you jumped into that very unfortunate situation by passing the Hawley-Smoot tariff, and I think you made a bad situation infinitely worse.

Mr. Sayre said later:

> I think the explanation lies in this fact: As a result of that depression, which I think was accentuated importantly by the Hawley-Smoot tariff, other countries began employing economic devices, such as exchange control, import licenses, and other measures which strangled trade. As a result of that trade strangulation you had a cutting off of foreign exchange. I think it was largely because of the foreign countries' inability to pay for the goods which they would like to have bought that foreign trade still further sank to that terribly low level.

I stated in answer:

> I think we are really victims of a condition that developed following the depression and the general world condition.

And Dr. Sayre stated that, in his opinion, the World War and its aftermath was really the responsible element connected with the depression that developed at that time.

Mr. Chairman, very soon the people of this country are going to wake up. They are being soothed at the present time. This has been the greatest administration in the history of the country to administer to the great body politic large and frequent doses of soothing sirup. That is what the people are getting in connection with these trade agreements now. You have endeavored to soothe them in every way, shape, and form, but they are going to find out in a very short time just where this policy is leading us. I should like to know how we can expect industry to absorb the unemployment of this country when you are constantly cracking down on industry, when you are constantly hamstringing industry, taxing their undistributed earnings, and making it more difficult for them to expand their markets and expand their industrial production here in the United States. Even frequent "breathing spells" will not permit them to survive such treatment.

Now, let me say something with reference to the peace situation. I am not so sure that entering into reciprocal-trade agreements will absolutely insure against our going to war with foreign countries. A great deal has been said about the necessity for the development of the good will of the people of the world. I asked the Secretary of State a rather pointed question about that. I asked him if in the recent trip to South America there had been in a sense a swap or a trade, giving them a trade advantage by trade treaties for peace treaties or declarations for the continuance of peace. He did not answer my question directly but entered into a lengthy dissertation with reference to the state of mind of the people of that country and those who were in attendance at that conference.

Mr. Chairman, I like the Secretary of State; he is a distinguished member of the Cabinet; but on the policy of protective tariff we are as far apart as the poles. For 10 years I sat across the table from him as a member of the Ways and Means Committee away back in the days when the emergency tariff bill was passed, and we quarreled across the table over these tariff policies. I also remember the period when we had the Fordney-McCumber bill up for consideration. I was a Member of the House at that time, and I have heard nearly every viewpoint expressed not only on this side of the House but on the Democratic side of the House. I helped to write the Hawley-Smoot bill of 1929 that was passed in 1930. I do not know how many, and I do not make it as a charge, but Member after Member on the Democratic side of the House came to me seeking protection for the commodities that were manufactured or raised in their respective States.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROWTHER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONNERY. I remember well that in 1929 the gentleman from New York cooperated with me in reference to a tariff on shoes. At that time Czechoslovakia was sending 6,000,000 pair of shoes into the port of New York. If we had not put that tariff of 30 percent on shoes the shoe industry of this country would have been wiped out.

Mr. CROWTHER. The gentleman is correct, and I thank him for his contribution. He is one of the few Members on the Democratic side who, after espousing the cause, had the courage to vote for the bill. [Applause.]

I see my friend the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FULLER] smiling. He appeared before the committee on behalf of a duty on canned tomatoes, and sent his speeches throughout his district to illustrate to his people the effort he had made in their behalf, but when the roll was called he was recorded on the other side of the fence.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas rose.

Mr. CROWTHER. I should like to yield to the gentleman from Texas. You had one of the greatest exponents of the protective-tariff system here for a long time, Claud Hudspeth, a sterling character. He was not afraid to go down there in the Well and explain to you boys the error of your ways. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield the gentleman from New York 5 additional minutes.

Mr. CROWTHER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I was simply going to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that he made, I think, the best speech in favor of the Hawley-Smoot bill. The gentleman made the closing argument and predicted that the sunshine of prosperity was about to burst upon us through the passage of that bill.

Mr. CROWTHER. That is right; and there have been a number of prophecies made since then, none of which have been fulfilled. It is dangerous to prophesy. [Laughter.] It is dangerous to attempt to be a prophet in Congress; and, furthermore, I think there ought to be a law or a rule of the House providing that you cannot quote the RECORD on another Member of the House except within 30 days after he has made a speech. [Laughter and applause.]

But seriously, gentlemen, this is a matter of vital importance to the country. I realize the absolute futility of myself or anybody else here saying a word against this bill. Some Democrats have spoken against it and that may help, although it has not helped in the past on final passage.

I recall when we had the emergency-tariff bill on the floor when I first came to Congress under my first President, Woodrow Wilson, and the best speech I ever heard in my life in behalf of protection for agriculture and for the cattlemen was made by the now Vice President of the United States, "Jack" Garner, standing down there at that desk. That speech to most of us is merely a pleasant memory. It was not a pleasant memory to a good many Democrats, but they were relieved of embarrassment because it never saw daylight and was never printed in the RECORD. The illustrious Republican Member and the lone Republican Member from that State, Henry Wurzbach, stood in the Well of the House and offered to post a check of considerable size for the benefit of any named Washington charity if Mr. Garner would publish that speech in the RECORD, but it was never published.

Now, with respect to this peace business, I am not so sure about that. This article I am going to quote from is in line with something that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON] said a few moments ago:

> Take automobiles, for instance. Argentina alone bought nearly 30,000 American cars last year, and could buy many more if customs duties were not as high as they are. But the Argentines want to sell their beef here and they cannot do it because of sanitary restrictions they think unjustified. Mr. Hull seems to favor the idea of a two-way let-down of official barriers to reciprocal trade.
> However, the American Live Stock Association, assembled at El Paso recently, warmly disapproves. "South America is the only fly in the cowman's ointment", said the association's president. "This Argentine business is Secretary Hull's idea to promote peace and world markets. He is a high-class gentleman, but he is making a mistake."
> Obviously political unrest and the realization that fireworks may start when least expected do not help trade. Without trade, there can be no prosperity to speak of. And prosperity, in the words of Mr. Hull, is not different from peace.
> So, if the achievements of the pan-American conference for the consolidation of peace are carefully strained, the only things that now remain are the brilliant oratory and the written and verbal pacts, which make neither peace nor war any more remote than they were in the first place.

This expresses very clearly my idea as to the fallacious contention that trade agreements will insure our friendly relations with the world and throttle the activities of the war god.

It is regrettable that the minority was not given adequate support at the hearings by representatives of American industry and agriculture. Organized labor should have presented a united front for the protection of American industries. The dearth of witnesses appearing against the extension of the trade agreements leads me to one of two conclusions; either our industrialists are satisfied with the present program or else they were afraid of reprisals in case they were involved in future agreements. It is my own opinion that the latter is the real reason for their nonappearance.

If this legislation is passed, wage earners in the shops and on the farms will be the victims. The figures to prove this have been presented here time and time again. The stores of our cities are flooded with foreign merchandise. This is the best market in the world and every foreign country seeks it. Give the American workman a full pay envelope and he is the best spender in the world.

One of the slogans of this Democratic administration has been the "good neighbor" policy. Let us bring the good neighbor policy home. Let us make it a domestic policy. [Applause.] Let us stop hamstringing and lighten the burdens of business. Let us give business an opportunity to spread and develop in this country and give the man a job who is our neighbor here at home and take him off the dole, and in this way restore his self-respect and normal conditions in our country. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL].

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include therein a letter of protest signed by every Republican Member of Congress, dated June 4, the reply of Professor Sayre on July 9, and my reply to that letter.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman wishes to include statements of other Members of Congress, he should ask for it in the House.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, I make no pretense of being an expert on tariff matters. Unlike some of my colleagues, I have not had the benefit of years of experience on the Ways and Means Committee, nor have I had the benefit of hearing the great mass of testimony taken at those hearings before that committee during the many years the tariff has been an issue in Congress. I can only speak of my personal experience and of the way in which the reciprocal-trade agreements have and are affecting my district.

Michigan leads the world in the production of sour cherries. Ninety percent of the sour cherries grown in Michigan are grown in my district. In 1927 the cherry growers and canners of my district, with remarkable foresight, began to realize that unless an additional market was found there would be a surplus of cherries when the trees then planted matured and came to full bearing. With this thought in mind, they began to develop the maraschino cherry. Up to that time it was believed that only the small white, sweet cherries grown in Italy and European countries could be used for the maraschino trade. In 1927 I accompanied representatives of the growers to the Agricultural Department of the State of Michigan in an attempt to develop a new maraschino cherry which would absorb a part of this threatened sour-cherry surplus. In 1930 a Republican Congress placed a tariff on the importation of cherries. This tariff was made high enough to protect the American industry and labor from the cheap labor of the southern European countries, taking into consideration the fact that as high as 80 percent of the cost of the finished product of the maraschino cherry was labor.

In 1929, 22,000,000 pounds of Italian cherries were shipped into the United States for the maraschino trade. So successful was this development of the maraschino cherry that in 1932 less than 1,000,000 pounds were shipped into this country, and in 1935 practically no foreign cherries were sold on the American market. Last year—1936 crop—25 percent of the sour-cherry crop went into the maraschino trade.

In February 1935, at the beginning of the Seventy-fourth Congress, in looking over the bulletins of the Secretary of State's office, I learned that a reciprocal-trade agreement was contemplated with Italy. I immediately became apprehensive. I feared that the tariff would be lowered on maraschino cherries; that the great amount of sour cherries now going into the maraschino trade would be thrown back on the sour-cherry market, creating a surplus and thereby ruin the price. I might add that during that time sour cherries sold as low at 1½ cents a pound and never higher than 2½ cents a pound. I called up the office of the Secretary of State and asked whether he contemplated reducing the tariff on cherries. He stated that he could give me no information on the subject; that I would have to present any facts I had to the fact-finding board of the Tariff Commission. I wrote him, asking for the same information, and received the same reply in effect. I finally wrote to the cherry interests and chambers of commerce in my district, advising them, as a matter of precaution, that they should file briefs and present their arguments, written and oral, before the fact-finding board of the Tariff Commission as to why the tariff on foreign cherries should not be reduced. They sent Mr. A. J. Rogers, manager of the Cherry Growers Packing Co., of Traverse City, Mich., to Washington. Mr. Rogers and I appeared before the fact-finding board of the Tariff Commission, argued the case, and submitted both written and oral briefs.

During the hearings and upon my questioning, I was informed by the acting chairman of the fact-finding board that he could give me no information as to whether it was contemplated to reduce the tariff on cherries or not. He further informed me that the fact-finding board could only take the testimony and submit it to the Secretary of State without recommendation. We were placed in the ridiculous position of having to argue against the reduction of the tariff on cherries without knowing whether the Secretary of State contemplated reducing the tariff on cherries. Imagine going into a court of justice and defending yourself without knowing whether you have been accused of anything. Yet that is the position in which we found ourselves. All of the facts were presented. We told the board of the development of the maraschino cherry; of the threatened surplus of sour cherries; of how at least a part of the surplus had been eliminated by the sour cherries being absorbed by the maraschino trade. We informed it of the millions of pounds of sour cherries that went into the maraschino trade and just how they were manufactured. We had with us samples of the manufactured product.

The Cherry Growers Packing Co. is a cooperative, nonprofit corporation organized, owned, and operated by some 700 farmer growers of the northern part of my district. Last year this one concern packed more than 30,000 barrels of cherries in brine for the maraschino trade, each barrel containing 250 pounds, or a total of more than 8,000,000 pounds of cherries.

Owing, undoubtedly, to the Ethiopian war, the Italian treaty was never completed, and the cherry interests of my district felt safe at least for the time being.

Imagine my amazement and surprise when a year later, or approximately the 1st of June 1936, I learned that a reciprocal-trade agreement had been made with France in which the tariff on maraschino cherries had been reduced from 9½ cents a pound plus 40 percent ad valorem to 9½ cents a pound plus 20 percent ad valorem. The State Department informed me that this reduction, upon the basis of 1934 importations, represented a reduction in the tariff of from 96 percent to 76 percent. Under the most-favored-nation clause, under which the Secretary of State is operating, every other nation, including Italy, could take advantage of this tariff reduction, even though such nation was not a party to the reciprocal-trade agreement between France and the United States. I immediately wrote a letter of protest, which was signed by 11 Republican Members of Congress from Michigan, protesting against this reduction in tariff and setting forth a part of the facts which had been presented at the hearing before the fact-finding board of the Tariff Commission. I ask unanimous consent to place into the RECORD a copy of this letter of protest.

JUNE 4, 1936.

HON. CORDELL HULL,
Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. HULL: We have just been informed that under the trade agreement with France the tariff on maraschino and candied cherries not in brine nor sulphur and not in their natural state was reduced from 9½ cents a pound plus 40 percent ad valorem to 9½ cents a pound plus 20 percent ad valorem. Your Department further informs us that this reduction upon a basis of the 1934 importations represents a reduction of the tariff from 96 percent to 76 percent. Under the "most-favored-nation clause" adopted by you in your reciprocal-trade agreements, this concession permits the importation of these cherries by any other nation, including Italy, with the same reduction in tariff which is given France.

For your information, approximately 22,000,000 pounds of Italian cherries, in addition to cherries from other countries, were shipped into this country for the maraschino trade in 1929, and prior to the time this tariff was placed on the importation of this product. In 1934, after this tariff had been in operation approximately 4 years and industry had had an opportunity of operating, the importation of this product was reduced to approximately 700,000 pounds. The remainder of the maraschino-cherry trade was supplied by domestic cherry growers and manufacturers. In view of the fact that there has been a surplus of cherries in this country for several years past this has been an important factor in keeping the cherry industry from being completely demoralized. The maraschino-cherry trade has absorbed from 10 to 15 percent of the total crop, which has been a decisive factor in preventing a still greater surplus, and a complete break-down of prices.

The above tariff rate was based upon the difference in the cost of production in this country and in the European countries, represented mainly in the difference of the cost of labor. The French trade agreement permits the importation of the finished product which represents approximately 80 percent labor. The price the cherry grower receives for his cherries is ultimately determined by the price the consumer pays for the finished product. All cherries in brine, either domestic or foreign, must ultimately meet this foreign competition as a finished product. A 20-percent reduction on cherries in brine, which are worth about 10 cents a pound, would have meant a reduction in the price of the finished product of approximately 2 cents a pound. We are informed that the candied or finished cherries sell for about 30 cents a pound, and therefore a 20-percent reduction would mean a reduction of 6 cents a pound. In view of the difference in the cost of labor in European countries and in this country, this reduction will throw open the door to the importation of manufactured cherries, will deprive the home grower of his market, and will add to the surplus crop of the United States in any year in which a normal crop is produced. All of these facts were presented to the fact-finding committee of the Tariff Commission a year ago.

We, the undersigned members of the Michigan delegation in Congress, protest against the reduction of the tariff on this product.

Yours truly,

Albert J. Engel, George A. Dondero, William W. Blackney, Carl E. Mapes, Roy O. Woodruff, Earl C. Michener, Clare E. Hoffman, Jesse P. Wolcott, Clarence J. McLeod, Verner Main, F. L. Crawford.

On July 9 I received a letter from the Honorable Francis B. Sayre, Assistant Secretary of State, which I also ask unanimous consent to insert into the RECORD.

JULY 9, 1936.

MY DEAR MR. ENGEL: Secretary Hull has requested me to inform you that the Department has given careful and sympathetic consideration to the letter of June 15, 1936, signed by you and 10 other Congressmen representing districts of the State of Michigan, with respect to the reduction from 9.5 cents and 40 percent ad valorem to 9.5 cents and 20 percent ad valorem in the import duty on maraschino, candied, and other prepared and preserved cherries, under the trade agreement with France. I take pleasure in giving you the following information in regard to this matter:

With reference to your statement that the duty reduction affecting maraschino and candied cherries under the trade agreement with France constitutes an increase in foreign competition for all cherries in brine, it may be pointed out that maraschino and candied cherries are made of sweet cherries, almost exclusively of the Queen Anne variety, which is grown in commercial quantities on the West coast, but not in the East. East of the Rocky Mountains sour cherries are the dominant variety grown, and are produced for kitchen and canning markets. The Michigan cherry industry is, as you doubtless know, mainly engaged in the growing of cherries of the latter variety, whose markets are not competitive with the special kinds of imported cherries on which the duty has been reduced.

According to the estimates of the Department of Agriculture, in the year 1935 only 9 percent of the Michigan cherry crop was of sweet cherries, the bulk of 91 percent being sour cherries. Moreover, it is my understanding that the bulk of the relatively small crop of sweet cherries is sold in the fresh-fruit markets. In 1934 only 6 percent of the crop of your State was reported to be composed of sweet cherries.

Unfortunately, buyers in this and other fields sometimes endeavor to secure more favorable prices by the use of arguments which do not always bear analysis. I sincerely hope that the cherry growers of your State will not allow themselves to be misled, during the coming season, as to the true significance of the duty reduction.

Sincerely yours,

FRANCIS B. SAYRE,
Assistant Secretary.

On August 7, 1936, after having verified again the facts contained in my former correspondence, I answered Mr. Sayre's letter of July 9. I ask unanimous consent to place into the RECORD my letter of August 7 from myself to the Assistant Secretary of State.

LAKE CITY, MICH., August 7, 1936.

Hon. FRANCIS B. SAYRE,
Assistant Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SAYRE: Your letter of recent date with respect to the reduction from 9.5 cents and 40 percent ad valorem to 9.5 cents and 20 percent ad valorem in the import duty on maraschino, candied, and other prepared and preserved cherries under the trade agreement with France received. Your letter reads in part as follows:

"With reference to your statement that the duty reduction affecting maraschino and candied cherries under the trade agreement with France constitutes an increase in foreign competition for all cherries in brine, it may be pointed out that maraschino and candied cherries are made of sweet cherries, almost exclusively of the Queen Anne variety, which is grown in commercial quantities on the west coast, but not in the East. East of the Rocky Mountains sour cherries are the dominant variety grown and are produced for kitchen and canning markets. The Michigan cherry industry is, as you doubtless know, mainly engaged in the growing of cherries of the latter variety, whose markets are not competitive with the special kinds of imported cherries on which the duty has been reduced."

This statement is absolutely in error. The Cherry Growers Packing Co., of Traverse City, Mich., alone are packing this year in excess of 28,000 barrels of Montmorency cherries in brine to go to the manufacturing trade for maraschino cherries. There is one other company in Traverse City which is packing 8,000 barrels. Approximately 50,000 barrels of Montmorency cherries are being packed in brine this year for the maraschino trade. Each barrel contains 250 pounds. This means that 9,000,000 pounds of Grand Traverse region cherries are being packed this year for the maraschino cherry trade, and approximately 12,500,000 pounds of New York and Michigan cherries are being packed for that trade this year. Let me remind you that Montmorency cherries are not sweet cherries, but are sour cherries; that these 12,500,000 pounds of cherries used for the maraschino trade would otherwise go into the sour canning cherry trade, and would add to the surplus, helping to break the price in a year with an average production or a surplus of this product.

This industry grew from nothing in 1929 up to this magnitude in a few short years. The outlook for future development was good until this treaty was signed. I am informed that Italy is now offering in the United States hand-pitted and barreled-in-brine cherries at a price of 5 cents per pound, exclusive of duty, which leaves nothing in it for the grower or the labor used in hand pitting. The cost for hand pitting alone is in excess of 5 cents a pound for that type of fruit.

Mr. A. J. Rogers, of Benzonia, Mich., representing the Michigan cherry growers, accompanied me to the fact finding board of the Tariff Commission a year ago last winter protesting against taking the tariff off on cherries. All of these facts were presented to that Board, including the fact that the sour cherry is being used extensively for the maraschino trade. Now you profess an ignorance of the very facts contained in the records placed there by the representative of the cherry growers, who traveled 750 miles to testify at that hearing. This ignorance on the part of the Department of State is inexcusable. A continuation of this policy will mean ruin for the cherry industry, because it can mean just one thing—the throwing of this tremendous amount of Montmorency cherries on the sour-cherry market, creating and increasing a surplus and lowering the price.

The statement was recently made by an official of this State that "while you can plow under wheat, cotton, or corn, you cannot plow under cherry trees." I wish to again enter my emphatic protest against this action on the part of the State Department, which, if continued, will ultimately spell ruin for the cherry industry of my State and my district.

Sincerely yours,

ALBERT J. ENGEL.

On August 14 I received a letter from the Department acknowledging receipt of my letter and informing me that after due consideration the letter would be answered.

On November 30, 1936, and after the political campaign was over, I received a letter from the Assistant Secretary of State saying that approximately 5,000 pounds of cherries had been imported into the United States to the end of August and that we had not been hurt. He talked of cherries as though they could be grown as an annual crop like wheat or cotton. He failed to take into consideration the fact that cherries grow on trees, and that it takes trees a number of years to mature; that the full development of this cherry production would not be felt until additional trees had come into bearing. While only 5,000 pounds of cherries had been imported to the beginning of August, the tariff report for November 1936 shows that approximately 1,000,000 pounds of cherries had been imported, most of them during the last few months of 1936.

Every time we protest against a reduction of the tariff in a reciprocal agreement we are told by the Secretary of State that there has been no material increase in the importation of the product in which we are interested and that we are not being hurt by the reduction made. Let me remind him that a foreign country does not accept a tariff concession made by us in a reciprocal trade unless they expect to ship goods into this country under that concession. They make concessions to us in return for concessions made by us to them. The Secretary of State would have us believe that he has traded nothing for something; that the concessions made to us in these trade agreements will increase our foreign trade but that the concessions made by us to them will not increase their foreign trade. When he tells us that this trade in which a reduction in tariff on cherries was made will not hurt the cherry grower, he tells us that he gave France nothing for something he got in the way of a trade concession. Why kid ourselves? The fact is that France would not have accepted a tariff reduction in cherries in return for a tariff concession they made us unless they were convinced that this tariff reduction would enable them to ship cherries to us. When the Secretary of State wrote me on November 30, 1936, he stated correctly that only about 5,000 pounds of these cherries had been shipped into the United States. But when the November 1936 tariff report was posted to January 6, 1937, it showed that nearly a million pounds had been shipped in, and this is only a beginning. As usual under these reciprocal-trade agreements, the foreigner out-traded the Yankee.

Despite the fact that the cherry growers of my district sent their representative here, who traveled 1,500 miles to give information regarding the maraschino cherry to the fact-finding board of the Tariff Commission, telling them how 25 percent of the sour-cherry crop is going into the maraschino trade, the only answer the Secretary of State had in his letter of July 9 was to point out "that maraschino and candied cherries are made of sweet cherries, almost exclusively of the Queen Anne variety, which is grown in commercial quantities on the West coast, but not in the East", claiming that "the Michigan cherry industry is, as you doubtless know, mainly engaged in the growing of cherries of the latter variety, whose markets are not competitive with the special kinds of imported cherries on which the duty has been reduced." Every man, woman, and child in the cherry country knows this is erroneous. This display of gross ignorance on the part of the Secretary of State in the face of the uncontradicted evidence submitted is absolutely inexcusable. This statement demonstrates the uselessness of coming down and presenting facts before the fact-finding commission. The Secretary of State would not have made the statement that sour cherries are not being used in the maraschino trade had he read the testimony that Mr. Rogers traveled 1,500 miles to give to the fact-finding board of the Tariff Commission. It is an outrage for the office of the Secretary of State to make reciprocal-trade agreements without adequate facts, and it is particularly outrageous to invite people here to testify as to facts which are uncontradicted and then not even take the trouble to look at the record which they ask them to make.

Hundreds of people are employed in hand-picking and hand-pitting these maraschino cherries. They receive good wages. The Traverse City Cherry Growers Packing Co. informed me that they can send cherries to Italy, have them hand-pitted in Italy with cheap Italian labor, send them back to the United States, paying the freight both ways, and the cost of these pitted cherries would be less than pitting them in their own plant. They inform me that these cherries are hand-pitted in Italy by women and children for 40 cents a barrel of 250 pounds each, or 7 cents a day. Eighty percent of the cost of producing the finished product of the maraschino cherry is labor, and with this difference in the cost of labor it can and will mean just one thing if the present tariff reduction is maintained or still further reduction is made, and that is that the maraschino-cherry industry will be ruined and that this 25 percent of the sour-cherry crop which is going into that market will be thrown into the sour-cherry market, breaking the price in any year of normal production.

Let me remind the Secretary of State that many times a comparatively small importation of a product added to a crop in this country is the "straw that breaks the camel's back." It breaks the domestic price by adding to a surplus or creating a surplus when there is a normal crop.

I am not particularly opposed to reciprocal-trade agreements but I am opposed to this method of making these agreements. I am opposed to sacrificing American industry in this way. I am opposed to trading Michigan cherries for southern cotton. It does not take a tariff expert to analyze these facts and come to the conclusion as to what will happen if this policy is persisted in by the Department of State. I maintain above all that the cherry growers of my district or any other industry have the right to know whether or not their product is threatened by an agreement before they are asked to come down here blindly to testify or defend themselves, not knowing whether they will be brought into court or not. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, the Secretary of State released for the morning newspapers of November 22, 1935, this choice statement:

> I had the experience of closely observing the conditions and circumstances attending the consideration and passage of the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill in 1909 and all subsequent tariff measures. I have seen the Capitol overrun with highly paid lobbyists representing most tariff items. They were to be observed in virtually every corridor, passageway, and dark corner from the House to the Senate end of the Capitol. Through logrolling and similar insidious methods they harrassed Congress and succeeded in securing their own abnormally high rates, especially in the notoriously unsound Hawley-Smoot Act of 1930, which, more than any other factor, was responsible for our loss of exports to Canada aggregating $600,000,000. The reeking national scandal thus attending the passage of this act is well remembered.

To whom does the Secretary of State refer as the objectionable lobbyists infesting the Nation's Capitol seeking by insidious methods to obtain abnormally high rates in the "notoriously unsound Hawley-Smoot Act of 1930"? The Secretary of State must have in mind the farm organizations, for no group obtained higher rates for their products than did the farmers, especially the dairy group. Here are some of the farm organizations that appeared and asked relief under the Hawley-Smoot Tariff Act: American Farm Bureau Federation, National Grange, American Dairy Federation, National Cooperative Milk Producers Federation, National Poultry Council, American National Livestock Association, and National Horticultural Council.

The farmers represented by these groups did get relief under this much-maligned legislation. I have cited the proof and again cite it as convincing, indisputable evidence that the farmers obtained the very relief required to save them from utter ruin from Canadian importations. Again let me quote from a Canadian publication. Here is what the Hawley-Smoot Act did, if a report of a Canadian publication voices the Dominion's views. I quote from the Canadian Forum under date of September 1932, which carried an article entitled "Canada and the American Tariff", in which the author points to the effect of the Hawley-Smoot Tariff Act upon the Canadian farmers:

> This—
> Hawley-Smoot—
> act practically wiped out Canadian export of feeder cattle and of milk and cream to the United States. The farmers of the prairies found cattle a welcome source of cash income in times of poor wheat crops, and the dairy farmers of eastern Quebec and New Brunswick had built up a profitable business selling to the metropolitan centers along the eastern seaboard of the United States.

Now, then, in the face of this statement showing conclusively the benefits to the dairy farmers from the rate of 56.6 cents per gallon on imported cream, the Secretary of State in the Canadian trade agreement reduced the tariff to 35 cents per gallon.

The tariff on imported Canadian beef was reduced from 3 cents per pound to 2 cents per pound.

All of these duties were reduced as follows: Calves from 2½ cents to 1½ cents per pound, dairy cows from 3 to 1½ cents per pound, cheese from 7 cents to 5 cents per pound, live poultry from 8 cents to 4 cents per pound, horses from $30 to $20 per head, maple sugar from 6 cents to 4 cents per pound, apples from 25 cents to 15 cents per bushel, fresh strawberries from 1¼ cents to three-fourths cent per pound, cherries from 2 cents to 1 cent per pound, peas from 3.9 cents to 2 cents per pound, potatoes from 75 cents to 45 cents per 100 pounds.

I quote from the Montreal Star, under date of September 26, 1936, pointing out the tremendous increase in Canadian exports to the United States in 8 months under the reciprocal-trade agreements:

> The biggest export, affected only by a guaranty of free entry, was in newsprint, rising from $45,000,000 to $52,000,000. * * * Planks and boards rose from $4,957,000 to $7,409,000. Pulpwood increased by $460,000 to $4,746,000. * * *
> Big business is being done in beef cattle, which increased from $4,435,000 to $7,210,000, dairy cattle from $1,017,000 to $1,771,000.

Again I call your attention to the later report of the chief trade commissioner in the United Kingdom, made January 1, 1937:

> The agreement came into operation on January 1, 1936; by the end of June the long-standing adverse balance against Canada was converted into a favorable one by over $32,000,000.

I doubt if it is generally known by the membership of this House that the Canadian trade agreement contains a reservation which authorizes the Canadian Parliament by legislation to afford an opportunity for appeal to the Tariff Board respecting value for duty purposes where it is claimed that the importation of goods into Canada may affect prejudicially Canadian manufacturers and producers. Such a reservation has been made by Canada, by an exchange of letters between the Canadian Legation and Secretary Hull, dated, respectively, November 15, 1935, and November 29, 1935.

At the proper time I shall offer an amendment to the act to furnish protection to our manufacturers and producers from imports that may affect them prejudicially. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized for 45 minutes.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including certain excerpts from decisions of courts and certain tables.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, we have had a treat this morning. It is always most enjoyable to listen to the greatest exponent of high protection that the Congress has. I am happy that the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER] is able to be here this morning and, in his inimitable manner, carry the fight as he sees it to this side of the aisle. The gentleman from New York, Dr. CROWTHER, is the best that the high protectionists can produce. He is a man of broad experience, he is a profound student, and he is fair. He is the tops. I listened to every word the gentleman had to say. I thought sometime along in his address I would hear some specific reference to some isolated industry or some isolated farming section that had suffered adversely from these trade agreements; but, with all his knowledge, he was silent in that respect. He, as do the other gentlemen who are opposing this proposition, deals in generalities. Their whole opposition is based upon fear—not fear of that which has happened but fear of that which is to come.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL] talked about sour cherries. A great portion of the opposition that comes to us deals with a commodity known as "sour grapes."

I helped prepare and wholeheartedly join in the majority report urging the adoption of House Joint Resolution 96 extending the President's trade-agreement authority for 3 more years. It is a source of genuine satisfaction to remember that I participated in the preparation and passage of the original bill into law.

Time flies—it seems but yesterday that we were joined in political debate over the passage of the original measure. Fear was the motivating power sought to be used by our Republican friends to defeat it. Fear that harm would come to American agriculture, industry, and labor as a result of embarking upon a trade-agreement policy for the restoration of our foreign trade, which had admittedly disappeared to the vanishing point. Fear that the delegation of power to the President to execute these agreements would drive a hole in the old boat "Constitution" and it would sink before our very eyes.

Fear, fear, fear. Three years ago we listened to the sermons uttered by the prophets of fear. The original act was passed just before the 1934 elections. The prophecies of fear were dire and doleful. Fewer such prophets returned to the Congress. Two more years and we witnessed a campaign in which there was a record broken—more words were used in one form or another than ever before in any campaign. The prophets of fear again preached their sermons. The people gave no heed. Fewer prophets of fear were returned to Congress. I just wonder if folks ever learn a lesson. I hope that my friends on that side of the aisle will open their eyes and see before it is too late. The hands of time run on, and shortly another election will be held. Unless they read the signs of the times—the fact that America and Americans are progressive in their ideals and aspirations—there will be even fewer of our old friends returned to us.

SECRETARY OF STATE

There is a different tune in the wail and lamentations in this political debate from that which we heard 3 years ago. I think that it is due more to the fact that the country has "snapped out of it" than anything else. Conditions today are so much more improved than they were in the spring of 1934 that one simply cannot have the same attitude toward the extension of this law as our friends had toward its enactment. I do not say that you are not sincere today. You have the same right to your views about what proposed legislation will do or will not do as I, but certainly it is fair enough to assume that you were sincere in the position you took in the original consideration of this legislation. Your fears, so sincerely expressed, could not but have effect upon your auditors, and particularly those of us who are intimately associated with you and know your patriotism and devotion to service. Your fears were expressed in doleful terms—at times I would jerk myself up wondering just whether or not there might be something in these fears. I would recall that the congressional elections of 1934 were in the offing and issues were necessary to be had, and all that sort of thing, but, at the same time, your lamentations had effect. Then this thought would come to me and give me solace. I knew that the President of the Unted States would not want to harm agriculture, industry, labor, or people. It just simply is not in his make-up to want to harm anything or anybody. His purpose here on earth, his purpose in life is to be of benefit to the men, women, and children of this country. Of that I have no doubt.

Then I would get to thinking about who would administer the law. I agree with you that the administration of law is almost as important, and in many instances as important, as the law itself. When I would think along that line, of course, I would recall that the Honorable Cordell Hull, Secretary of State, would negotiate these trade agreements. Thinking him over, I knew that no one could successfully question his ability, his patriotism, his purpose to serve his people. Thinking about the elections, I could not fail to recall that he was experienced in the practical affairs of politics and that he certainly had the rural point of view, having been born and reared in the mountain country of Tennessee. Of all persons, he is neither mystic nor dreamer. With this background, I knew that he would have no purpose to injure agriculture, labor, or industry, and, what is more, he would have no purpose or desire to do that which would injure the party which, as he and I believe, serves best the interest of the common man and woman of this country.

Furthermore, the man who was to negotiate these trade agreements had been prepared for this character of service. With 22 years of service as a Member of the House of Representatives, years of service as a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, spending months and months of arduous labor in connection with tax bills and tariff bills, he supplemented his service in the House with service in the Senate of the United States. This service was broadened by the call to the Secretaryship of State. And when I had doubts as to the administration of this law, I would come back to the fact that the courageous, patriotic, able, experienced Cordell Hull would head up this activity and my fears would be wiped away.

My friends, this legislation and its administration is as near bombproof as any legislation sought to be extended since I have been a member of this great body. It is to the credit of the President of the United States—it is to the credit of the Secretary of State—it is to the credit of another great American, Dr. Francis B. Sayre, who has given unstintedly of his time, of his life in making a continual study of trade-agreement matters to keep at his finger tips the most comprehensive array of thought and information on these questions. All that I can say in this respect is that it has been work well done.

No piece of legislation which has come within my knowledge has been more carefully administered than this one. No piece of legislation has received more commendation from the American public. There are no vulnerable points in it—it is bombproof. The few specific items that were brought under attack in the recent campaign cannot stand the light of facts that surrounds them.

THE ISSUES

It is a difficult matter to speak to the position taken by our minority friends. The majority report and the minority report presumably create the issues in the legislative trial now under way, but we find it difficult in the light of the facts to know upon what part of the answer our minority friends rely. The pleadings in the minority report are inconsistent. If it were a court, we would know what to do; we would promptly move for the minority to elect upon which of the defenses they rest their case.

I have seen many reports, but I do not believe I have ever read a more ingenuous one than that signed by the minority. From the ordinary political viewpoint it is the tops. It boldly states that the Republican Party not only favors reciprocal-trade agreements, but that such has been their policy for many years. We read therefrom:

GENERAL STATEMENT

In opposing the joint resolution, we wish it to be distinctly understood that we are in no way criticizing the doctrine of genuine reciprocity with foreign nations. The Republican Party has actively espoused this policy in previous measures, notably the McKinley tariff of 1890 and the Dingley tariff of 1897.

We feel it necessary to make this statement at the outset, since it has been generally assumed that because we have consistently opposed the methods of administration of the present trade agreements program, we do not favor any reciprocal negotiations whatsoever with foreign countries. Such, however, is not the case. We yield to none in our earnest desire to expand the foreign trade of the United States, whether by reciprocity or otherwise, but our advocacy of the general policy in question does not justify us in approving the present Trade Agreements Act, which presents in fact pseudo-reciprocity, and is open to many serious objections.

So there is no doubt in the minds of counsel for the plaintiff, the Democratic Party, that the opening words of the answer tie the defendant irrevocably to the policy of foreign-trade agreements. Thus, for those in the Republican Party who favor the increasing of our foreign trade, the defendants' plea is that they favor reciprocity and reciprocal-trade agreements—that it is a time-honored policy of the Republican Party; that they initiated the policy under the great McKinley, father of the McKinley Tariff of 1890—that they tried it out and rewrote the policy in the Dingley Act of 1897, and they adhere to such policy of the past.

The defendant, however, does not stop there. They set forth seven specific pleas in opposition to the policy. Three of these pleas would apply with equal force to the trade-agreement portion of the McKinley Act, the Dingley Act, and the flexible tariff provision originally passed in the Fordney-McCumber Act and later reenacted in the Smoot-Hawley Act. The other four pleas are based upon an erroneous impression of the law and its administration; statements which cannot be supported by the facts in the legislative court or any other impartial tribunal.

I assume that if our minority friends were called upon to elect which defense they would rely upon that the political exigencies would require that they would drop their first plea, otherwise there would be no issue presented. So I assume that if forced to elect upon which defense they rely, our minority friends would stand upon what they call a "summary of objections", which we include verbatim herewith:

SUMMARY OF OBJECTIONS

House Joint Resolution 96 continues the present Trade Agreements Act, with all its defects, without change. It is subject to the same criticisms which we interposed with respect to the act when it was originally under consideration, and the results since its enactment have justified our objections at that time.

It continues, first, to delegate to the executive branch of the Government, contrary to the Constitution of the United States, the tariff, taxation, and treaty-making powers of Congress.

Second, to take away from American producers the right which they ordinarily would have had under section 516 (b) of the Tariff Act of 1930, to litigate matters arising out of the trade agreements, including the question of constitutionality.

Third, to deny the Congress an opportunity to approve or reject the trade agreements, however injurious may be their effect upon domestic producers.

Fourth, to ignore the principle of protection for American agriculture, industry, and labor by permitting tariff rates fixed by Congress to be altered without reference to domestic production costs.

Fifth, to deny American producers an adequate opportunity to be heard on the actual terms of the trade agreements before they become effective.

Sixth, to provide for the general extension of the concessions made under a trade agreement with a single country to all other countries in the world, notwithstanding the known existing discriminations against American commerce by many foreign countries.

Seventh, to permit the Executive, in effect, to bind the hands of Congress by "freezing" the existing tariff or excise treatment of articles with respect to which the Congress may, in the exercise of the people, and the confidence of the country must be reposed in the future.

These are among the more important objections to the Trade Agreements Act which preclude us from giving our support to House Joint Resolution 96, providing for its extension for 3 years.

We will take the Summary of Objections as our text and treat in turn each of the seven objections made.

OBJECTION NO. 1

It continues first, to delegate to the executive branch of the Government, contrary to the Constitution of the United States, the tariff, taxation, and treaty-making powers of Congress.

In other words, our minority friends claim that this act unconstitutionally delegates taxing and treaty power. For the life of me, I cannot understand how this defense would be set up at this time, yet seven distinguished gentlemen signed the minority views, three of them are splendid lawyers. This matter is really not debatable. The placing of this discretion in the Chief Executive of the United States is not an unconstitutional delegation of power. Precedent for this policy is found in 1794; it has been in existence in this country from the earliest days of our Republic.

The other day my good friend from Ohio, TOM JENKINS, paid a beautiful tribute to a great Republican leader of yesterday, Hon. William McKinley, Member of the House and President of the United States. It is his name that is affixed to the McKinley Tariff Act of 1890. In this act the power is vested in the President of the United States to execute these trade agreements with foreign countries. This act was passed with Republicans in control of the House, the Senate, and the White House. The same discretionary power was placed in the hands of the President of the United States, the same Honorable William McKinley, under the Dingley Tariff Act of 1897—placed there by a Republican House, a Republican Senate, and a Republican President.

To the end that no one who desires information thereon may have doubt as to the language in the various acts referred to, we set forth, at the end of my remarks, section 3 of the McKinley Tariff Act of 1890; section 3 of the Dingley Tariff Act of 1897, and section 2 of the Payne-Aldrich Act of 1909; and sections 336–338 of the Smoot-Hawley Act of 1930 (flexible tariff), now existing law.

Each one of the foregoing laws was passed by a Republican Congress and signed by a Republican President.

Furthermore, under the power granted to the President by the McKinley Act and the Dingley Act, the then President of the United States entered into 21 agreements plus 5 supplemental and amendatory agreements providing for tariff changes. It is plain that the power granted to the President under these acts is broader in its scope than the powers conferred upon the President under the flexible tariff provision or the Trade Agreements Act. Under the McKinley Act and the Dingley Act power was vested in the President to take articles from the free list and put them on the dutiable list. Criticisms have been made relative to the percentage of tariff changes under the Trade Agreements Act. I merely submit that the difference in percentage between the free list and the dutiable list is only limited by infinity itself.

In addition to the power to take from the free list and make applicable certain tariff rates, the Dingley Act had provision for a reduction in rates to be made by Presidential proclamation.

I restate that, in my opinion, the question of congressional power being unconstitutionally delegated is no longer debatable. In Field v. Clark (143 U. S. 649) the McKinley Act authorization of tariff changes was before the Court for its constitutionality. It was under attack as a delegation of legislative power and a delegation of treaty-making power. The Court upheld this act in respect of each objection. It held that it was not an unconstitutional delegation of legislative power but that it gave the President the authority to find the existence of certain facts and to make effective the previously declared will of Congress. I quote from that opinion:

It would seem to be unnecessary to make further reference to acts of Congress to show that the authority conferred upon the President by the third section of the act of October 1, 1890, is not an entirely new feature in the legislation of Congress, but has the sanction of many precedents in legislation. While some of these precedents are stronger than others in their application to the case before us they all show that, in the judgment of the legislative branch of the Government, it is often desirable, if not essential for the protection of the interests of our people, against the unfriendly or discriminating regulations established by foreign governments, in the interests of their people, to invest the President with large discretion in matters arising out of the execution of statutes relating to trade and commerce with other nations. If the decision in the case of the brig Aurora had never been rendered, the practical construction of the Constitution, as given by so many acts of Congress, and embracing almost the entire period of our national existence, should not be overruled unless upon a conviction that such legislation was clearly incompatible with the supreme law of the land.

In the same decision the Court said further:

Half the statutes on our books are in the alternative, depending on the discretion of some person or persons to whom is confided the duty of determining whether the proper occasion exists for executing them. But it cannot be said that the exercise of such discretion is the making of the law. So, in Locke's appeal (72 Pa. Stat. 491, 498).

To assert that a law is less than a law because it is made to depend on a future event or act, is to rob the legislature of the power to act wisely for the public welfare whenever a law is passed relating to a state of affairs not yet developed or to things future and impossible to fully know. The proper distinction, the Court said, was this: "The legislature cannot delegate its power to make a law, but it can make a law to delegate a power to determine some fact or state of things upon which the law makes, or intends to make, its own action depend. To deny this would be to stop the wheels of government. There are many things upon which wise and useful legislation must depend which cannot be known to the lawmaking power, and must, therefore, be a subject of inquiry and determination outside of the halls of legislation." What has been said is equally applicable to the objection that the third section of the act invests the President with treaty-making power. The Court is of the opinion that the act of October 1, 1890, is not liable to the objection that it transfers legislative and treaty-making power to the President.

It should be stated that in the Fields case, supra, the Court reviewed nine different acts of Congress, beginning at 1794, in which powers had been conferred upon the President relating to legislation of foreign commerce.

Referring to the Dingley Act and the validity of section 3 thereof. Without the burdening of the RECORD with quotations, we respectfully submit that in nine different decisions of the Federal Court, section 3 has been recognized as valid.

Section 2 of the Payne-Aldrich Act of 1909, providing for minimum-maximum tariff rates, with power vested in the President to proclaim the minimum rate in the event there is no discrimination or burden upon our commerce was not put to court tests. This provision did not call for foreign-trade agreements as the other statutes referred to did, but it gave the President power to secure the removal of discriminations and burdens upon our commerce through vesting him with power to impose added tariff burden upon commerce moving to our country.

Section 336 of the Smoot-Hawley Act is almost identic with section 315 of the Fordney-McCumber Tariff Act of 1922. The Supreme Court in Hampton & Company v. United States (276 U. S. 394) upheld the constitutionality of section 315 of the Fordney-McCumber Act and sustained the act. I insert an excerpt from this opinion:

The field of Congress involves all and many varieties of legislative action, and Congress has found it frequently necessary to use officers of the executive branch, within defined limits, to secure the exact effect intended by its acts of legislation, by vesting discretion in such officers to make public regulations interpreting a statute and directing the details of its execution, even to the extent of providing for penalizing a breach of such regulations.

The Court also said:

It is conceded by counsel that Congress may use executive officers in the application and enforcement of a policy declared in law by Congress and authorize such officers in the application of the congressional declaration to enforce it by regulation equivalent to law. But it is said that this never has been permitted to be done where Congress has exercised the power to levy taxes and fix customs duties. The authorities make no such distinction. The same principle that permits Congress to exercise its rate-making power in interstate commerce, by declaring the rule which shall prevail in the legislative fixing of rates, and enables it to remit to a rate-making body created in accordance with its provisions the fixing of such rates, justifies a similar provision for the fixing of customs duties on imported merchandise. If Congress shall lay down by legislative act an intelligible principle to which the person or body authorized to fix such rates is directed to conform, such legislative action is not a forbidden delegation of legislative power. If it is thought wise to vary the customs duties according to changing conditions of production at home and abroad, it may authorize the Chief Executive to carry out this purpose with the advisory assistance of a tariff commission appointed under congressional authority. This conclusion is amply sustained by a case in which there was no advisory commission furnished the President—a case to which this Court gave the fullest consideration nearly 40 years ago.

This question of constitutional power was debated over and over again 3 years ago. The late James M. Beck, a great constitutional lawyer, was a Member of this body at that time. It was expected that he would take the bill and tear it to pieces on account of its constitutional weakness. I was instructed to sit at his feet in that debate. I listened to every word that he uttered. He made a marvelous speech—a most pleasing speech; a most persuasive speech. To him who would read it, there is persuasion that 50 years or more ago the Supreme Court of the United States went astray from its moorings, as he saw it, in their holding constitutional acts of Congress delegating discretionary power in the Executive to do the thing that Congress had said shall be done. James Beck was never more eloquent, but he never cited a single opinion of any court that, in my opinion, even squinted in the direction that the Supreme Court, after all these years and all these rulings, would declare this law to be unconstitutional.

In my humble way I so stated upon the floor of the House that no case had been presented by him or any other Member debating the question supporting the invalidity of said measure. If decisions and precedents mean anything, the question is no longer debatable.

Furthermore, this law sought to be extended was placed upon the statute books on the 12th day of June 1934. Almost 3 years have passed, and there has been no court opinion that has held such act to be unconstitutional. On December 7, 1936, the United States Customs Court in New York, in the case of Fletcher against United States, declined to hold the act under discussion unconstitutional. It is fair to say that they did not discuss the constitutional point; the case was dismissed on the ground that the action could not be brought by one who had suffered no injury. The action was brought by an importer, who charged that the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act of June 12, 1934, was unconstitutional. In the opinion, written by Judge Evans, it was ruled that the protest provisions of the Tariff Act of 1930 did not authorize an importer to protest the constitutionality of rates which he claimed to be too low and which consequently could not have injured him.

We hasten to admit that this case went off on a point other than the constitutionality of the statute, but we would call the attention of the House to the fact that if this statute passed almost 3 years ago had been vulnerable from a constitutional viewpoint, there certainly has been plenty of time in which to have developed a case to the decision point.

It is easy to say that an act is constitutional or unconstitutional. The only difference is just two letters, "un." A person can very easily grunt that. There has been a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States since this matter was debated 3 years ago, to which we call the special attention of the House. It is a decision which was rendered on December 21, 1936, in the case of United States against Curtiss-Wright Export Corporation. This case settled two things: First, that these agreements were not treaties in the sense that they need senatorial confirmation, and, further, that the President of the United States had the power to execute them. It seems to me that even the minority could see this.

THE EVOLUTION OF THE PRESENT TRADE-AGREEMENTS ACT

It occurs to me that the Trade Agreements Act of 1934 has a natural evolution. In 1890 we had the McKinley Tariff Act; in 1897 the Dingley Act. In 1909, while we had no trade-agreement provisions, the results were obtained in a different method. In that act, the Payne-Aldrich bill, passed by a Republican administration, power was vested in the President to fix minimum or maximum tariff rates based upon whether the particular nation involved had discriminated against this country in the way of tariff duty. There was some 134 proclamations put into execution under the authority granted in that bill. This was a rather arbitrary power—the yardsticks were far more vague than those found in the flexible-tariff provisions or under the statute involved herein, but it was a step in the direction of the flexible-tariff provision, which was put upon the books in 1922 by a Republican Congress and a Republican President over the vigorous protest of Democratic leaders.

Now, what is the Flexible Tariff Act? It provides that the Tariff Commission may, under certain circumstances, make investigations and reports to the President on particular items, and he, in his discretion, may increase or decrease the tariff duty, with an outside limit of 50 percent. The flexible tariff is now the law. I submit that the yardsticks in the Trade Agreements Act are really more definite and comprehensive than the flexible-tariff provision; but the point that I would illustrate is that our Republican friends have empowered the Chief Executive, under their own statute now in effect, to lower or raise the tariff 50 percent. Action under this law could be taken now. Our Republican friends say why do you not operate under the flexible-tariff provisions and do that which you say ought to be done—lower the excessive unusual rates of the Smoot-Hawley bill against which you have so long complained.

The answer to that is that after the passage of the Smoot-Hawley Act the other countries of the world raised tariff barriers in retaliation to the Smoot-Hawley Act. Now, if we proceed to operate on those rates under the flexible tariff we reduce our tariff rates without reducing the retaliatory rates; foreign countries will get the benefit of our reductions, but their tariffs will not have been lowered. Their tariff barriers in the way of restrictions and quota would not be affected and we would get no concessions for the lowering of these tariff rates; whereas, under the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act, expressing the same constitutional power which is the basis of the flexible-tariff provisions, Congress has passed a Trade Agreement Act vesting the President with the same power that he has under the flexible-tariff provision—to increase or lower tariff rates within the same limits; but coupled with that power and discretion you have the opportunity of trading and bargaining and securing the lowering of tariff barriers against those things which we want to export and, likewise, the removal of tariff restrictions and tariff quotas which have retarded our goods moving into the world markets, all in consideration of our lowering the excessive unreasonable barriers set up in the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act. Boiled down, the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act is the flexible-tariff provision exercised for valuable consideration.

In respect of the delegation of power, the courts in an unbroken line of precedents say that we have this authority. I call the attention of my friends on the minority to one sentence in the Hampton case which passed on the flexible-tariff provision:

> If it is thought wise to vary the customs duties according to changing conditions of production at home and abroad, it may authorize the Chief Executive to carry out this purpose with the advisory assistance of a tariff commission appointed under congressional authority.

Now listen to this:

> This conclusion is amply sustained by a case in which there was no advisory commission furnished the President—a case to which this Court gave the fullest consideration nearly 40 years ago.

I take it they were referring to the case of Field against Clark.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. REED of New York. Will the gentleman kindly read into the RECORD at this point the standard set out in that bill?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I am going to include in my extension of remarks the McKinley Act, the Dingley Act, the language of the Payne-Aldrich Act, and the flexible tariff provision as it appears in the Smoot-Hawley Act. It speaks for itself.

I submit, as a lawyer, that the standard set up in this legislation is broader and stronger than the standards set up under any preceding statutes. Ah, they upheld the McKinley Act and there was not any advisory commission. Ah, they referred to it when they upheld the flexible-tariff provision; but under this act we require the Chief Executive to get information not only from the Tariff Commission, not only from the State Department, not only from the Department of Commerce, but also from the Department of Agriculture.

> Second, to take away from American producers the right which they ordinarily would have under section 516 (b) of the Tariff Act of 1930 to litigate matters arising out of the trade agreements, including the question of constitutionality.

The minority complain that the right of American producers to litigate matters arising out of the trade agreements, including the question of constitutionality, is denied them under this act.

If any producer is legally injured in any way by the act, he has all the rights to litigate that any other citizen has. If he imports goods and believes he is injured by a trade agreement or by an interpretation of a provision in a trade agreement, he can file a protest under section 514 of the tariff act, just as any other importer.

Of course, no one has the abstract right to litigate for the mere fun of it under our judicial system; that practice is limited to the moot courts of our law schools. This is particularly true of constitutional questions. The Supreme Court has said over and over again that unless a citizen is injured by an act of Congress, he cannot go into court to attack its constitutionality. Under the American system of law and government, if a citizen objects as an abstract matter to a policy of government which does not injure him legally, he goes to the administrative official in charge, or to Congress, or maybe he will write a letter to the editor of his paper—the one thing he would not think of doing would be to go to court about it.

In addition, no one has a "right" to any particular tariff duty. For the benefit of the Republicans, who seem to have misplaced the citation, I wish to quote the exact words of the Supreme Court on this point:

> No one has a legal right to the maintenance of an existing rate or duty (Norwegian Nitrogen Products Co. v. United States, 288 U. S. 294, 318).

The Trade Agreements Act expressly provides for general public notice before any agreement is included. Producers can—and do—attend the hearings held under this provision of the act. No rights of theirs to state their views as fully as they wish have been infringed in the slightest.

> Third, to deny the Congress an opportunity to approve or reject the trade agreements, however injurious may be their effect upon domestic producers.

The third objection of the minority is that Congress has not insisted on the right to approve or reject the various trade agreements. Remember, the defendant pleads that they are in thorough accord with the McKinley and Dingley Tariff Acts, referred to by them as notable measures, actively espoused by the Republican Party. The Republican Congress and the Republican President who passed and signed these acts, did not insist on approving or rejecting the 26 trade agreements entered into under their terms. Now, there should be no misunderstanding; I am referred to the trade-agreement section of the McKinley Act and, likewise, the trade agreement section of the Dingley Act. It was section 3 of these acts. No congressional approval of the changes proclaimed by the President was required. Section 4 of the Dingley Act provided for the negotiation of general trade agreements and required senatorial ratification and congressional approval. Under this section, section 4 of the Dingley Act, several treaties were negotiated, 13 or 14, as I recall, but not one received the necessary ratification. However, under section 3 of the McKinley Act, and section 3 of the Dingley Act, 26 trade agreements were entered into without congressional approval or senatorial ratification and they remained in effect for several years.

We call attention to the fact that there was nothing required to be done by either the House or Senate after any proclamation that would be issued by the President under the power granted to him by section 2 of the Payne-Aldrich Tariff Act, nor was there any necessity of congressional action after Presidential proclamation of change in tariff duty under section 315 of the Fordney-McCumber Act or section 336 of the Smoot-Hawley Act.

The experience under section 4 of the Dingley Act certainly proves the impracticability of submitting such trade agreements to the Congress. Some favor submitting them for the ratification of both House and the Senate; others favor submitting them to the Senate. With reference to this latter proposal, they are classifying them as treaties, requiring senatorial confirmation. Such position merely indicates that the proponent is not familiar with the fact that they are not classed as treaties. It is very pertinent that if the trade agreements were required to be ratified by the Senate the House would immediately complain of its prerogative being invaded. Assuming the good will and hearty cooperation of all the Members of Congress in passing upon trade agreements, there are several practical objections to this procedure. Congress being in session about one-half the time, the President's hands would be tied about one-half the time. He would be unable to put into effect beneficial agreements while Congress was not in session. Anyone can realize the delay that would be attendant upon approval if these trade agreements were submitted to the House and Senate for ratification. The distinguished keynoter of the Republican Party, Senator STEIWER, suggests that it would be foolish to think that quick approval would be given trade agreements. Certainly it would take about as much time to ratify them if the merits were to be reviewed—and otherwise there would be no need to submit them for congressional ratifications—as it would to pass a tariff bill.

The Constitution gave to the Congress the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations with the intention that the power should be exercised for the benefit of the country as a whole, rather than to aid particular classes or sections. This is abundantly proved by the constitutional inhibitions against preferences to ports and export taxes as well as other provisions. Previous Congresses have shown a tendency to get away from this constitutional intention, having in legislation preferred one section over others, and it is far from certain that this tendency has been cured. In the Reciprocal Trade Agreement Act, Congress is spared the usual pressures applied during tariff legislation. Congress, having declared the legislative policy, leaves to the President the details, whereby he can act through the adequate assistance provided for in the act for the whole people without fear of sectional restraints.

The gentleman from Massachusetts very properly quotes statements from speeches made in the House by folks opposing flexible-tariff provisions. He quotes from a speech I made in 1932 wherein I contended that the delegation of power to the President to fix tariff rates under the flexible tariff provisions was unconstitutional. I frankly admit that I was wrong in my conclusions then, but, even so, on this particular point I feel that I am in no more of an inconsistent position than the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY]. As a matter of fact, we have simply swapped positions. I opposed the granting of this power to the President then; he favored it. I favor the granting of this power to the President now; he opposes it. As a matter of fact, I think that I am in better position than he. What we were really doing then, as I recall it, was holding a post mortem over the flexible-tariff provisions, but I believe that we also had up at that time the question of bringing the matter back to Congress after the President had acted for congressional action. I say frankly that I was in error then. Our Republican friends did not deem it necessary to develop the precedents throughout the years upon matters of this kind. It looked to me like an improper delegation of congressional power. My party had made the fight along that line in vain against what they called the unconstitutional delegation of power—exactly what our Republican friends are doing today—and I thought that my party leaders were right; but 3 years ago, when this matter was presented to our committee for our action, an affirmative action, frankly, I had the same views that I had theretofore held, and I insisted upon having reviewed the precedents upon which they sought this power. In a very comprehensive hearing upon the constitutional phase of it, there was but one thing for me to do and that was to recognize that I had been wrong in the position I had taken about the validity of the flexible tariff, and I do not hesitate to admit my error; but, lo and behold, our friend, Judge TREADWAY, has more to account for than I. Not only throughout the years did he maintain that Congress had the power to vest discretion in the Chief Executive to carry out the wishes of Congress in respect of the flexible tariff, but he is on record in one of his strongest utterances with reference to the necessity, or, rather, the lack of necessity of the action of Congress upon the conclusions reached by the President under the flexible tariff before the findings of the commission of the President would become effective.

As a matter of fact, Judge TREADWAY makes such a strong argument against the interference of the Congress in respect of matters of this kind that I feel that this speech, delivered on May 3, 1930, or, at least a portion thereof, should not remain hidden in the musty cover of a CONGRESSIONAL RECORD but should again be brought to light. On page 8576 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of said May 3, 1930, we find Judge TREADWAY saying this, in his usual vigorous and able manner:

> The most serious defect of the Senate bill is the nature of the language which would require the Tariff Commission to report to the President and to the Congress. There may be no serious objection to having the President transmit the report of the Tariff Commission to Congress, but to require action on the part of Congress in order to make the recommendations of the Commission effective would be a complete overthrow of the purposes of the flexible provision.
> In other words, the entire purpose of the Senate amendment is to take from the hands of the President any authority whatsoever other than a recommendation, simply making him a rubber stamp or a transmitting agency to act as the intermediary between the Commission and Congress.
> The second paragraph of section 336 (a) of the bill as passed by the Senate reads as follows:
> "The President, upon receipt of any such report of the Commission, shall promptly transmit the report to the Congress with his recommendations, if any, with respect to the increase or decrease in duty proposed by the Commission."
> We need no better illustration of the fallacy of such a provision as this than the history of the bill we are today considering. The Ways and Means Committee started work on this measure in November 1928. It passed the House on May 28, 1929. It passed the Senate on March 24, 1930. Since March 24 it has been in conference. It is now being taken up for consideration in the House, and after a few days here in this branch it may be interminably discussed in the Senate.
> We are frequently asked when, if ever, this bill will become a law. Perhaps you can read the answer in the stars or consult a soothsayer. Certainly no Member of Congress can prophesy with any degree of accuracy when this conference report will be disposed of in the Senate. Items then remaining in disagreement will be again considered in conference and more time will be consumed.
> The business of the country has been in an uncertain and chaotic condition for nearly 2 years while this bill has been in the making. Anyone wanting a duplication of such a condition as that should vote for the Senate provision and take from the hands of the President his authority to proclaim, after due consideration, his approval or disapproval of the findings of the Tariff Commission on an application for a change in some rate.
> I know our Democratic friends will represent, as they have done in the past, that under the flexible provision we are abrogating the rights of Congress to write tariff rates. This is absolutely incorrect and incapable of proof. Whether a Republican or a Democrat holds the exalted position of President of the United States, he is chosen for that position by the will of the majority of the people, and the confidence of the country must be reposed in his judgment. To ask him to become simply a transmitting agency to the House of Representatives of the action of the Tariff Commission is a denial of the confidence of the people in his judgment and capacity.

The great clamor has been to get the tariff out of politics and to place it on a scientific basis. The flexible tariff provision is one of the principal instrumentalities toward that end. The House bill contains a provision for a more practical use of the authority vested in the Tariff Commission to make investigations into the cost of production and comparisons of costs of competitive articles. So far, so good. If by the next step we deprive the President of the exercise of his authority under the present law and under the House provision by substituting the Senate idea of a report to Congress, we will more than nullify the merit of the changes the House has suggested in methods of securing comparative prices. Instead of taking the tariff out of politics, the Senate provision puts it into politics 12 months in a year. Just as rapidly as the Commission could make a report and the President transmit the same to Congress, just so fast would the merits of the item be discussed by one or the other of the two branches.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] is a man of great persuasive power and influence, and I bespeak his followers to give heed to what he had to say when he was on this end of the singletree.

Fourth, to ignore the principle of protection for American agriculture, industry, and labor by permitting tariff rates fixed by Congress to be altered without reference to domestic production costs.

Apparently when they, the minority, came to this point, they were so discouraged that they did not even bother to look at the act. Section 4 requires the President to consult the one agency in this country that knows more about costs of production than any other—the Tariff Commission. For years the Tariff Commission has been investigating costs, collecting cost figures, writing reports on costs and complaining how hard it was to decide whose costs should be used in fixing average costs.

It just is not true that the Trade Agreements Act permits, or that the administration is entering into, agreements "without reference to domestic production costs." Costs are carefully considered whenever they are available and the protection of American producers has been carefully maintained. Prices have gone up, have they not? Farm income is up. What does the farmer care if a little trickle of cheese comes in from Canada, provided he can sell more of his own cheese and at a better price. A monopoly of a small market is not worth as much as 98 percent of a large and prosperous market.

Fifth, to deny American producers an adequate opportunity to be heard on the actual terms of the trade agreements before they become effective.

The fifth objection is that American producers under the act are denied an adequate opportunity to be heard. That is a strange objection. Section 4 of the Trade Agreements Act expressly requires "reasonable public notice of the intention to negotiate an agreement." This notice has been given and full and open hearings have been held on every trade agreement concluded. No notice of any kind, much less open hearings, was required by law or in fact given when the 26 agreements were entered into under the "notable" McKinley and Dingley Acts. We further point out that no hearing is required under section 338 of the Tariff Act of 1930—the Smoot-Hawley Act—under which the President has potential power of causing great injury to a domestic industry by imposing duties up to 50 percent or even to the extent of excluding from entry merchandise needed for the operation of industries.

Under section 336 of the 1930 act—the flexible tariff—hearings are definitely required, as they are in the Trade Agreements Act, but they are not required by law to be "public." The Tariff Commission, by regulations, has ordained that such hearings be made public, as has the committee for reciprocity information in conducting hearings pursuant to the Trade Agreements Act.

Under the procedure heretofore adopted, notice was given of the articles that were the subject of trade between the two countries. The critics of the bill indicate that this notice is too broad. It has been restricted by recent order, in which the notice hereafter will contain the items which may be involved in the agreements reached between the two countries.

OBJECTION NO. 6

Sixth, to provide for the general extension of the concessions made under a trade agreement with a single country to all other countries in the world, notwithstanding the known existing discriminations against American commerce by many foreign countries.

I suppose the minority will resent my taking seriously their not very serious most-favored-nation objection. After objecting to extending concessions to other countries, they say:

No serious objection could be made to most-favored-nation treatment if American commerce received similar treatment from all foreign countries to whom concessions are extended.

They agree, apparently with some reluctance, that the elimination of foreign discriminations is an important and necessary aim; but they think that a slap in the face to a country seriously trying to stop discriminatory practices which grew up during the depression and panic years is more effective than the gentle but firm statement that unless all due speed is followed in eliminating discriminations we will have to stop extending the benefit of our concessions. So far we have had to do that with but two countries—Germany and Australia. We may have to do it with others; but if we really want to eliminate discrimination, we have got to give the other country a reasonable chance to remove its discriminations.

Anyway, the policy the minority condemns has benefited $265,000,000 of our exports—when hasty retaliation would have encouraged numerous fresh discriminations—while we have extended concessions on only $30,000,000 of imports.

OBJECTION NO. 7

Seventh, to permit the Executive, in effect, to bind the hands of Congress by "freezing" the existing tariff or excise treatment of articles with respect to which the Congress may, in the exercise of its constitutional responsibilities and duties, wish to legislate in the future.

The minority make one final point which interests me as a lawyer and as a legislator with some familiarity with our revenue laws. They object to that part of the act which authorizes the President—

To proclaim * * * such continuance * * * of existing * * * excise treatment of any article covered by foreign-trade agreements, as are required or appropriate to carry out any foreign-trade agreement that the President has entered into hereunder.

The minority—with their customary exactness and conservatism of statement—say (p. 23) of trade agreements using their power:

The effect of these provisions is to tie the hands of Congress with respect to internal taxes.

First, it does not tie the hands of Congress. Second, it affects in a very moderate way, only a minute part of our "internal taxes."

All trade agreements are temporary and terminable by the United States on relatively short notice. If Congress decides that (1) the reciprocal promise—contained in every agreement binding excise treatment—of the other country not to hike up an excise tax on American goods alone, and (2) the general benefits of the agreement are both outbalanced by the domestic revenue needs for a tax on the few specific commodities covered in the Cuban, Colombian, and Brazilian agreements—the only ones containing the provisions so exaggeratedly described by the minority; if that occurs, Congress can direct the termination or amendment of those three agreements at the next expiration date.

Excise taxes bearing more heavily upon goods imported from trade-agreement countries than upon our own similar goods—the only instance where the provisions could be used—are very few in number and supply only a most inconsiderable part of our total revenue. No other taxes are remotely affected by the power referred to. The charge that Congress has tied its own hands "with respect to internal taxes" is absurd.

It seems to me that this is a most far-fetched attack. There is nothing to prevent Congress from refusing to pass the law extending the terms of the act or on any day in any session to repeal the act in its entirety, or to amend the law by striking out the provisions under the existing law which is the authority for the inclusion of language that is objectionable to some. The question of policy in this regard is one thing, the question of power is an entirely different one. Certainly if the Congress of the United States were to determine that such a provision was not conducive to the welfare of our country, we could meet the issue squarely in the face and legislate relative thereto and nothing would come of it other than the termination of the trade agreement in due course.

SANITARY PROVISIONS IN TRADE AGREEMENT

The gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN] states that each one of the 15 agreements contains a provision that we will not impose any sanitary measure unless the other country agrees to it. It is true that there have been incorporated in the agreements provisions to the effect that the governments of each country agree to consult respecting sanitary embargoes, and agree to give consideration to representations of the other government concerning the application and endorsement of such sanitary regulations. But there is nothing whatever in the agreements that prevents the United States from carrying out its sanitary laws or from modifying those laws. There is simply a provision to facilitate international good will by giving to the other party a chance to be heard. It must further be pointed out that that provision gives the United States a similar assurance in regard to its own exported products, particularly fruits.

Another gentleman or two in debate have endeavored to muddy the water with the question of sanitation and quarantine. They are expressive of fear as to what result would flow from the proposal now pending in the Senate with reference to a treaty affecting the sanitation and quarantine law. Their attitude today is merely fear of what will happen if certain things are done in regard to this treaty, but we call it to the special attention of the House and the country that this is the tactics that is always used when a person cannot argue to the point at issue. There is no question involved in this discussion with reference to the contents of a treaty pertaining to the future and the results that will flow therefrom is certainly in the future and has no connection with this debate.

Fear is expressed that the importing of foreign products will bring foreign diseases to this country—plant and animal. Why, my friends, there is no change in the law of the land relative to the inspection and effort to prevent such diseases from coming into this country. It seems to me that a child would recognize that it is imperative to guard against any transmission of diseases referred to into our country. The purpose of this law is to benefit agriculture, including the livestock grower. Those administering the act certainly are just as mindful to the dangers of the spread of disease as those who are now in opposition.

The point is that there are no changes through the language of any treaty of the existing law of the land relative to sanitation and quarantine matters. May I repeat, there has not been a single law on the statute books in regard to sanitation that has been changed, has there?

Mr. CULKIN. I will answer the gentleman if he will permit me to do so.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Has there been any change in the law?

Mr. CULKIN. In 14 of these agreements it is provided we cannot make any sanitary regulations without the consent of the other signatories.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. It does not say that. It says that this country will give consideration to their desires along that line. But I say now no sanitation law has been changed one iota. Why, these gentlemen get up here and talk about treaties, and my friend the gentleman from Kansas and the gentleman from Nebraska talk about what is going to happen with regard to quarantine and sanitation if a certain treaty is negotiated and ratified. Nothing has been done to injure the livestock dealer. There is not anything that would cause a spread of the hoof-and-mouth disease. Do you not think the men who negotiate these treaties are practical? Do you not think they love their country, and if they are not patriots, do you not think they are good Democrats enough not to want to do anything that would cause a spread of the hoof-and-mouth disease, or any disease to our plant life?

TRADE BALANCE

Anyone who is willing to spend 5 minutes looking at the official figures will see that, whether good or bad, the decrease in our merchandise export surplus has nothing to do with trade agreements. That decrease is not due to a falling off in our exports; on the contrary, exports have increased substantially. The decrease is due to a larger than normal quantity of imports caused by, first, the droughts of recent years that have put much of our agriculture on a net import basis, and, second, to the fact that our domestic recovery is proceeding at a faster pace than is the recovery of the rest of the world—hence we need proportionately more raw materials and luxuries than the rest of the world, generally speaking, can at the moment take of our manufactured goods.

If, apart from the trade-agreements program—which I understand to be the subject before the House—the minority want to discuss our balance of trade now, it is all right with me. The Republicans seem to regard any imported article as a plague germ. The rest of the world owes us money for past loans and for current purchases of our goods. People who have money or credit usually prize it for what they can get with it. The present time certainly does not seem particularly favorable for investing much of our international surplus of payments abroad. We are in the fortunate position of being able to replace some of our drought losses and to acquire raw materials for the factory products our population needs and can buy—giving employment to men and women here in this country, without having to go in debt for it. I, for one, do not object to the exchange of products and commodities, with the benefits consequent to our people from such sale, for useful and needed goods which do not compete in any substantial sense with our own production.

We hardly know just the way the minority is going in the way of trade balance. Upon the floor we heard a very distinguished gentleman of the committee emphasize the fact that in 1936 there was an unfavorable balance of trade, that the imports exceeded exports by more than $4,000,000, and he referred to the fact that this was the first time in 41 years that such a condition had happened. On page 24 of the minority report it is expressly admitted that we still have a favorable balanced trade; that is, that there is an excess of exports over imports to the amount of $34,000,000. I feel certain that my good friend from Michigan was sincere in his statement, but, for the purpose of the record, I would call attention to the fact that there is no issue between the majority and minority reports upon the point that we have a favorable balance of trade in the figure of $34,000,000.

For 1934 and 1935 he has used the usual accepted method of calculating a trade balance which is the difference between United States exports, including reexports, and general imports. On this same basis our 1936 balance of trade amounts to the figure I have just stated, $34,000,000. For 1936, however, he chose to use another method for calculating trade balance, the difference between exports, excluding reexports, which in 1936 amounted to $37,000,000, and imports for consumption. This method gives for 1936 a deficit of $4,529,000.

In my extension of remarks, I am including an analysis of increase in United States imports in 1936 over 1935, prepared by experts in the United States Tariff Commission. The break-down is for items on free list, items upon which there has been no change in duty, and items upon which there has been a change in duty.

This very strong gentleman on the committee, and my good friend, injected for the first time the idea that we had an unfavorable trade balance. He was very careful about his statement. He is a strong man on the committee. He always keeps his powder dry and when he shoots you can always figure that there is something there at which he is shooting. I wondered about it because in the report it is agreed between the majority and minority—and the gentleman signed the minority report—that the trade balance was $34,000,000 to the good.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I believe I can say it just as fast as the gentleman can.

Mr. Chairman, what he did was this: He figured out the amount that comes in here for reexport purposes. He arrives at a figure of something like $37,000,000 and that makes an unfavorable trade balance of $4,000,000, according to his figures. But let me tell you this: He did not tell you that the usual way of figuring trade balances is to include the imports for the purpose of reexport. And I know the gentleman will agree with me that is the normal and usual way to make the computation.

I now yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I may say to the gentleman and to the members of the committee that I quoted only from a report of the Department of Commerce which was available to the gentleman from Kentucky, and to every other Member of Congress.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I have that, too. It gives both figures, and that is where I got the information. It gives the figures both ways. I say that kindly, because I know the gentleman is always accurate and fair.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I decline to yield.

Mr. WOODRUFF. The gentleman should yield when he makes that kind of a statement.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WOODRUFF. If the gentleman will examine the report of the Department of Commerce, he will find it deals only with imports for consumption.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The figure for this item is correct. It is found on page 3 of the report; but on page 2 of the same report you get the imports for reexport purpose included, and that makes $34,000,000 favorable balance. I submit the latter is the usual way of computing it.

SECRETARY WALLACE

The minority report is not quite fair to Secretary Wallace. It is always dangerous to rely on a quotation of one sentence or of several sentences with dots in between; so it is in this case.

I have indicated the faithfulness with which the minority has combined errors with half truths. I want to refer particularly to one. On page 24 they quote Secretary Wallace as saying that perhaps increased importations will lead foreigners to put their resulting purchasing power in our banks or in our securities. They stop quoting right in the middle of a sentence. The rest of the sentence is "or devoted largely to the purchase of nonagricultural goods." Secretary Wallace was talking entirely about farm markets and he was not discussing the benefit of farmers or reduced foreign barriers to their exports. He was referring only to the effect of deliberately increased imports on foreign purchases of our farm products. Here is what he actually said:

Selected goods could be imported liberally into a prosperous America without hurting the American manufacturer. That we know from what happened before the depression. In the calendar year 1929, during the greater part of which business was active in the United States, we imported merchandise to the value of $4,399,000,000. Exports exceeded this figure by $842,000,000. For the great bulk of the exports we took payment in imports and no one complained. Because we did so American industry had more business than it could have had otherwise. In the ensuing depression imports and exports declined together. Thus in 1932 the merchandise imports totaled only $1,323,000,000; but the exports were down also to $1,612,000,000. Buying less abroad did not give us proportionately more business at home. Conversely, an increase in imports now would not cut down but, on the contrary, would increase our total business. The exports would increase with the imports.

But the foreign-trade program would involve the risk of producing results other than those expected. We cannot know in advance the probable effect on prices and employment in industry. Nor can we foretell precisely the compensating benefit to agriculture. Asking industry and labor to make sacrifices for agriculture demands some assurance that the farmer will benefit. The purchasing power which foreigners would obtain in the United States market were they permitted to sell more goods here might be left on deposit or invested in American securities or devoted largely to the purchase of nonagricultural goods. That would leave unchanged the need to regulate agriculture. Formerly, when Europe had the means to do so, it bought farm goods heavily in the United States. Will it do so again?

Note the last statement which the minority did not consider important enough to quote:

Formerly, when Europe had the means to do so, it bought farm goods heavily in the United States.

After the gentleman from Kansas, a very distinguished Member of this body, read this report he got the hearings and found that Secretary Wallace had not appeared before the committee, and he left the inference Friday that because Secretary Wallace had not appeared before the committee, as he had done heretofore, that Secretary Wallace was not in favor of the bill. Of course, to meet that we had to go to work and get a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture which, with permission, I include in the RECORD at this point:

FEBRUARY 8, 1937.

Hon. ROBERT L. DOUGHTON,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. DOUGHTON: My attention has been called to the fact that, in connection with the debate on the floor of the House relative to the extension of the Trade Agreements Act of 1934, some significance was attached to the fact that the Department of Agriculture was not represented at the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee. This has apparently been interpreted to mean a lack of sympathy on the part of this Department with the trade-agreements program.

There is no basis for this interpretation. The Department of Agriculture is heartily in accord with the trade-agreements program. We believe that genuine progress has been made in the direction of breaking down trade barriers in foreign countries affecting our agricultural exports and that even greater progress can be expected in the future. We also believe that such actions as have been taken with respect to reductions in duties by the United States on agricultural products have been so carefully considered and safeguarded as to preclude significant injury to our domestic agriculture. As a matter of fact, we are convinced that those branches of agriculture affected by duty reductions made in the trade agreements will gain far more from a successful trade-agreements program than they could possibly lose. This gain will result in two ways: (1) Through keeping down the competition within this country in the areas now producing our export crops, and (2) through increased purchasing power in our urban centers brought about through larger exports of manufactured goods.

The significance of the trade-agreements program to American agriculture has been obscured by the extremely unfavorable weather conditions that have prevailed in this country in recent years, particularly the droughts of 1934 and 1936. It is this unusual weather and not the trade-agreements program that has been primarily responsible for an increase in imports of certain competitive agricultural products into the United States.

With a return of ordinary weather American agriculture is going to be in a position to take full advantage of any reductions in foreign import barriers that are secured in the trade agreements and of the increased purchasing power for our agricultural products that may result in foreign countries by reason of larger shipments of their goods to the United States. In fact, American agriculture is going seriously to need all the assistance that can be gotten from this source in the way of broader export outlets.

Sincerely yours, H. A. WALLACE, Secretary.

The Secretary of Agriculture goes on record unequivocally as favoring the extension of trade agreements to benefit the farmers of this country. And let me say, Mr. Chairman, if you increase the value of the gross foreign income from $5,000,000,000 in 1932 to $9,050,000,000 in 1936, or almost 60 percent, do you not think you have helped the farmers some?

PARTICULAR ITEMS

Ah, Mr. Chairman, the weakness of the case they make out when they pick out specific items.

Certain specific items have been centered on in the endeavor to create the impression that agriculture has been adversely affected by this legislation. I hope that I will not be considered partisan when I say that the farmers of this country certainly had an opportunity to say whether they were adversely affected by this act.

In the consideration of the original bill fears and warnings of adversity that would come to the farmers because of the enactment of this legislation were the "Big Berthas" of the opposition. Men were sincere about it; men representing the dairy country, the cattle country, and all other agricultural sections of our Nation painted in luring pictures what might happen to the farmer under this legislation, and, as we have said, the farmers have had two opportunities to determine whether they have been helped or hurt by the administration's policy. When the gross farm income in this country increases from $5,337,000,000 in 1932 to more than $9,050,000,000, excluding benefit payments, in 1936, it seems to me that there can be no argument about it, but I grant that even though these figures show an increase of 58.9 percent between these two periods, yet it is possible that in the operation on certain specific items harm could come. I address myself to the articles referred to by certain gentlemen as having had harmful effect from the operation of these agreements.

CATTLE

You have heard a lot about cattle. I just want to give you this one figure to carry in your minds.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. In just a moment.

Whereas there were 399,000 cattle of all kinds imported in 1936, there were 364,000 cattle of all kinds imported in 1935, before the Canadian agreement. Get that! Thirty-four thousand four hundred and ninety cattle, to be exact. About one-sixth of 1 percent more of the average annual domestic slaughter for the years 28–32. You would think that the tariff on cattle had been eliminated. Do you know that this reduction of the tariff from 3 cents a pound to 2 cents a pound for cattle weighing over 700 pounds, puts it back to the exact rate that was in the Fordney-McCumber Tariff Act. Let them put that in their pipe and smoke it.

It is said, although weakly, that the cattle grower has been adversely affected by the provision in the Canadian agreement whereby a duty reduction, effective January 1, 1936, from 3 to 2 cents per pound was granted in the case of cattle weighing over 700 pounds each. That is not the whole story. There is an expressed limitation on the amount of cattle affected. The quantity affected is that which is equivalent to only three-fourths of 1 percent of the average annual total domestic slaughter, including calves, during the years 1928–32. This tariff quota amounts to only 156,000 head of cattle. Under the agreement, after the quota amount enters this country the rate goes back to 3 cents per pound. To hear our friends on this subject you would think that the tariff had been entirely removed, whereas it was only reduced one-third and upon a limited quantity. It required 10 months last year before this quota was filled. A person might wonder what advantage Canada got. To them it was somewhat important due to the fact that this number of cattle seems to be about 15 percent of the total annual production by them whereas it is only three-fourths of 1 percent of the average annual total domestic slaughter during the 5-year period, 1928–32, three of which were depression years.

It is argued that there was a decline in cattle prices last year. The bulk of the cattle which came in under the agreement last year were what is termed "mediums." The marked decline in cattle prices was for the prime. It seems very apparent to me that the decline in the price for prime cattle was brought about through the forced marketing of the winter-fed cattle, due to the lack of feed occasioned by the drought. Certainly this would force upon the market the prime cattle at the earliest moment in the spring that they could be marketed. It was said by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] that the market was flooded with Canadian cattle in the first 3 months of 1936. He stated that he saw the cattle coming into the Buffalo market. I do not question for a moment his sincerity in his statement, but here is what the cold figures show as to cattle importations from Canada—this includes quota cattle and cattle not covered by the quota:

Total number of cattle imported from Canada only, year 1936

January	10,592
February	10,603
March	17,844
April	44,445
May	36,051
June	38,387
July	23,725
August	10,171
September	13,606
October	9,876
November	7,738
December	3,617
Total	226,655

We again remind that the quota was not filled until November 1, 1936, which shows conclusively that within the first 10 months there were 59,300 head of nonquota cattle which came from Canada, and upon which the tariff was not reduced.

It is enlightening to have comparative figures of the cattle imports from all sources for the years 1935 and 1936. The table follows:

Imports of cattle (from all sources) by months, years 1935 and 1936

Month	1935	1936
January	5,828	21,410
February	37,737	27,933
March	51,921	51,076
April	49,433	78,333
May	47,061	55,104
June	31,845	46,247
July	17,013	33,306
August	15,250	18,532
September	12,879	22,280
October	31,064	20,027
November	38,502	12,674
December	26,090	12,232
Total	364,623	399,113

We point out that the excess of cattle imported during year 1936 over 1935, from all sources, was 34,490. This figure is 0.0167 of 1 percent of the average annual total domestic slaughter for the 5-year period 1928–32.

CREAM

When I first heard of this item and the claim that the dairy farmer had been injured because of the Canadian agreement, I immediately was reminded of the active effort of the dairy block composed of splendid Representatives who are always alert to take care of this important agricultural product. I could hear them forcefully expressing the fear that injury would come to the dairy country due to the passage of the original Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act. They were sincere in their fears and so I thought at first that probably some mistake had been made and that dairy products were adversely affected, but the facts show beyond chance for argument that no injury has come to the farmer or the dairyman who produces milk, butter, cream, or other prepared milk products.

There is nothing in the trade agreements affecting milk or butter. There is a reduction in the import duty in the Canadian trade agreement, effective January 1, 1936, from 56.6 cents to 35 cents per gallon, which, by the way, is 15 cents per gallon more than the Fordney-McCumber rate. However, there is an expressed limitation to 1,500,000 gallons in any one calendar year. This seems to be a lot of gallons, but it develops that 1,500,000 gallons is about one-tenth of 1 percent of the total annual domestic production of milk in terms of cream, and is eight-tenths of 1 percent of production in the North Atlantic States, the principal area in which Canadian cream competes. This does not seem to be so many gallons now; but, when you hear the whole story, you will learn that the actual imports of cream from Canada in the year 1936 have been negligible—only 43,710 gallons. This is less than 3 percent of the quota of 1,500,000 gallons fixed by the trade agreement, and figures out to be four one-thousandths of 1 percent—four parts out of 100,000—of our annual domestic production of milk in terms of cream.

CHEDDAR CHEESE

In 1932 Cheddar cheese averaged 10 cents per pound. In that year only 600,000 pounds were imported. In 1936 Cheddar cheese averaged 15.3 cents per pound. There was an estimate of 11,000,000 pounds imported in that year. In 1932 there were 371,000,000 pounds domestically produced; in 1935 this rose to 469,000,000 pounds, and in 1936 to 494,000,000 pounds. The increase, 1936 over 1935, was 25,000,000 pounds. The imports in 1936 were less than 3 percent of the total domestic production. In 1932 the domestic producers received $37,000,000; in 1935, $67,000,000; and in 1936, $75,600,000.

I have not heard any complaint from any Representative of the dairy country that there has been an injury flowing to his constituents as a result of any trade agreement. Butter controls the price of milk and milk products. The significant fact connected with the interests of the dairy farmer is that there was no change in the tariff on butter, milk, or milk products.

BABASSU NUTS AND OIL

Fear is expressed relative to the importations of babassu nuts and mention thereof in some trade agreements. To start with, the tariff situation has not been changed by any reciprocal-trade agreement and it cannot be changed by any future reciprocal-trade agreement. Babassu nuts and babassu oil are on the free list, and, so far as I know, never had any tariff or tax imposed thereon—thus, they have not been affected and cannot be affected by trade agreements as the law itself does not permit the removal of any item from the free to the dutiable or vice versa.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield briefly at that point?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. CULKIN. Did the Secretary of State in the Brazilian agreement tie babassu nuts on the free list for 3 years?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. He did not have to put it on the free list; it is already there.

Mr. CULKIN. I mean did he not tie it, bind it on the free list?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Under this statute nothing can be done to take babassu nuts off the free list, for that is prohibited. No article can be taken from the free list and put on the dutiable list, or vice versa.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. What the gentleman says is true, but in the Brazilian agreement it was also agreed not to impose an excise tax on babussu nuts.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I have endeavored to treat of that matter heretofore.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOODRUFF. The gentleman says, and very properly, that Congress included in the act 3 years ago no provision whereby any article could be taken from the free list.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. That is right.

Mr. WOODRUFF. But the gentleman neglects to say that notwithstanding every effort made by the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee, the majority of that committee did not put that provision into the act.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I feel certain that if my friend says they did, they did it.

TEXTILES

I now want to call the attention of the House to the general attitude that existed here 3 years ago. O, Mr. Chaiman, the gentlewoman from Massachusetts, in her charming manner—oh, the tears that she did shed for her textiles. They had a New England bloc looking out for textiles, for which I find no fault.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I think New England and also the southerners are still shedding many tears because you have done nothing to prevent the importation of cotton textiles.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Yes; but, my good woman, as we say down in Kentucky, you cannot blame that on the foreign-trade agreements. There has been no agreement lowering the tariff on textiles.

You cannot blame that to any trade agreement with any foreign country. On the contrary, let me say that which she knows, as well as the other folks representing textile country, instead of lowering any tariff item that affected textiles, the President of the United States—this man who would ruin agriculture, who would ruin the workingman, who would ruin industry—last year provided for increases upon four different commodities produced in Japan in order to help the textile industry. Ah, Mr. Chairman, 3 years ago it was fear of what would happen, but it did not happen. The reverse occurred. They increased the tariff duties, and I will give the figures to you.

Tariff changes under sec. 336 of the Tariff Act of 1930 since June 12, 1934

Subject	Rate changed	New rate	Effective date of change
Cotton cloth:
Bleached	13 percent ad valorem plus thirty-five one-hundredths of 1 percent for each yarn number.	18½ percent ad valorem plus one-half of 1 percent for each yarn number.	June 20, 1936
Printed, dyed, etc.	16 percent ad valorem plus thirty-five one-hundredths of 1 percent for each yarn number.	22½ percent ad valorem plus one-half of 1 percent for each yarn number.
Frozen swordfish (reopened).	2 cents per pound	3 cents per pound	Feb. 22, 1936
Wool knit gloves and mittens.	40 cents per pound and 35 percent ad valorem.	40 cents per pound and 35 percent ad valorem on American selling price.	Mar. 22, 1936
Slide fasteners	45 percent ad valorem.	66 percent ad valorem.	July 31, 1936

Each of the above items is a Japanese product, and, excepting swordfish, is in competition with textiles. So much for the injury to textiles under the trade agreements, or any act of the present administration.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I beg your pardon; this time I want the last word. [Laughter.]

INCREASE OF IMPORTS IN 1936

I had an analysis made of the imports for 1936, and it is broken down into three major sections with respect to this increase. I include the analysis at the end of my remarks. I call special attention to the fact that there are three groups which are interesting to examine. Group one represents principally raw materials, mostly free of duty, totaling $139,000,000 (increase in 1936 over 1935). The second group consists of manufactured products mostly dutiable in which no change in duties has been made since the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act, these items total $83,000,000 increase in 1936 over 1935. The third group is a miscellaneous group of commodities which include the products upon which tariff rates have been changed. The total increase in 1936 over 1935 for this group is $118,000,000. It can be seen at a glance that the increases referred to can be divided into two groups by combining groups one and two, which total $222,000,000, consisting of items which in no way have been affected by trade agreements. That would leave group three affected by trade agreements amounting to $118,000,000.

Further, a matter of real interest to those who desire information is to note that in the items there are $109,000,000 of increase that is taken up with noncompetitive items.

CONCLUSIONS

Again referring to the minority report: After all these wanderings among paths unfamiliar to them, after getting so lost and so far afield, our friends come back to the true faith. After all, as I pointed out when I began and as the first comment of the minority report emphasizes, the Republicans do not dare oppose reciprocal-trade agreements in toto. They have to approve them and hope that the broad smile of welcome will hide the dagger hidden behind the back.

We do not have to take very seriously the objections of a party when their representatives on the Committee on Ways and Means conclude their attack with the following statement:

At the outset, we stated that we were in accord with the general policy of reciprocity, which we understand to mean the exchange of mutually beneficial tariff concessions between nations. According to our conception, protection and reciprocity are not inconsistent, but go hand in hand, the one seeking to secure the home market to domestic producers so far as they can reasonably supply the same, the other seeking, through mutually advantageous tariff concessions, to exchange our surpluses for articles which we need, together with the freedom of our market (through the medium of the free list) for the articles which we do not produce.

This is our philosophy, too. We thank the gentlemen of the minority for "them kind words." [Applause.]

PROVISIONS OF PRIOR ACTS

McKinley Tariff Act—1890

SEC. 3. That with a view to secure reciprocal trade with countries producing the following articles, and for this purpose, on and after the 1st day of January 1892, whenever, and so often as the President shall be satisfied that the government of any country producing and exporting sugars, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides, raw and uncured, or any of such articles, imposes duties or other exactions upon the agricultural or other products of the United States, which in the view of the free introduction of such sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides into the United States he may deem to be reciprocally unequal and unreasonable, he shall have the power and it shall be his duty to suspend, by proclamation to that effect, the provisions of this act relating to the free introduction of such sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides, the production of such country, for such time as he shall deem just, and in such case and during such suspension duties shall be levied, collected, and paid upon sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides, the product of or exported from such designated country, as follows, namely:

The classified items and rates then followed.

Dingley Tariff Act, 1897

SEC. 3. That for the purpose of equalizing trade of the United States with foreign countries and their colonies, producing and exporting to this country the following articles: Argols, or crude tartar, or wine lees, crude; brandies, or other spirits manufactured or distilled from grain or other materials; champagne and all other sparkling wines; still wines and vermouth; paintings and statuary; or any of them, the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, as soon as may be after the passage of this act, and from time to time thereafter, to enter into negotiations with the governments of those countries exporting to the United States the above-mentioned articles, or any of them, with a view to the arrangement of commercial agreements in which reciprocal and equivalent concessions may be secured in favor of the products and manufactures of the United States; and whenever the government of any country, or colony, producing and exporting to the United States the above-mentioned articles, or any of them, shall enter into a commercial agreement with the United States, or make concessions in favor of the products, or manufactures thereof, which, in the judgment of the President, shall be reciprocal and equivalent, he shall be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to suspend, during the time of such agreement or concession, by proclamation to that effect, the imposition and collection of the duties mentioned in this act, on such article or articles so exported to the United States from such country or colony, and thereupon and thereafter the duties levied, collected, and paid upon such article or articles shall be as follows, namely:

Here follows list of articles and rates of duties.

The President shall have power, and it shall be his duty, whenever he shall be satisfied that any such agreement in this section mentioned is not being fully executed by the government with which it shall have been made, to revoke such suspension and notify such government thereof.

And it is further provided that with a view to securing reciprocal trade with countries producing the following articles, whenever and so often as the President shall be satisfied that the government of any country, or colony of such government, producing and exporting directly or indirectly into the United States coffee, tea, and tonquin, tonqua, or tonka beans, and vanilla beans, or any of such articles, imposes duties or other exactions upon the agricultural, manufactured, or other products of the United States, which, in view of the introduction of such coffee, tea, and tonquin, tonqua, or tonka beans, and vanilla beans, into the United States, as in this act hereinbefore provided for, he may deem to be reciprocally unequal and unreasonable, he shall have the power and it shall be his duty to suspend, by proclamation to that effect, the provisions of this act relating to the free introduction of such coffee, tea, and tonquin, tonqua, or tonka beans, and vanilla beans, of the products of such country or colony, for such time as he shall deem just; and in such case and during such suspension duties shall be levied, collected, and paid upon coffee, tea, and tonquin, tonqua, or tonka beans, and vanilla beans, the products or exports, direct or indirect, from such designated country, as follows:

Payne-Aldrich Tariff Act, 1909

SEC. 2. Maximum and minimum provision: That from and after March 31, 1910, except as otherwise specially provided for in this section, there shall be levied, collected, and paid on all articles when imported from any foreign country into the United States, or into any of its possessions (except the Philippine Islands and the islands of Guam and Tutuila) the rates of duty prescribed by the schedules and paragraphs of the dutiable list of section 1 of this act, and in addition thereto 25 percent ad valorem; which rates shall constitute the maximum tariff of the United States: Provided, That, whenever, after March 31, 1910, and so long thereafter as the President shall be satisfied, in view of the character of the concessions granted by the minimum tariff of the United States, that the government of any foreign country imposes no terms or restrictions, either in the way of tariff rates or provisions, trade or other regulations, charges, exactions, or in any other manner, directly or indirectly, upon the importation into or the sale in such foreign country of any agricultural, manufactured, or other products of the United States, which unduly discriminates against the United States or the products thereof, and that such foreign country pays no export bounty or imposes no export duty or prohibition upon the exportation of any article to the United States which unduly discriminates against the United States or the products thereof, and that such foreign country accords to the agricultural, manufactured, or other products of the United States treatment which is reciprocal and equivalent, thereupon and thereafter, upon proclamation to this effect by the President of the United States, all articles when imported into the United States, or any of its possessions (except the Philippine Islands and the islands of Guam and Tutuila), from such foreign country shall, except as otherwise herein provided, be admitted under the terms of the minimum tariff of the United States as prescribed by section 1 of this act. The proclamation issued by the President under the authority hereby conferred and the application of the minimum tariff thereupon may, in accordance with the facts as found by the President, extend to the whole of any foreign country, or may be confined to or exclude from its effect any dependency, colony, or other political subdivision having authority to adopt and enforce tariff legislation, or to impose restrictions or regulations, or to grant concessions upon the exportation or importation of articles which are, or may be, imported into the United States. Whenever the President shall be satisfied that the conditions which led to the issuance of the proclamation hereinbefore authorized no longer exist, he shall issue a proclamation to this effect, and 90 days thereafter the provisions of the maximum tariff shall be applied to the importation of articles from such country. Whenever the provisions of the maximum tariff of the United States shall be applicable to articles imported from any foreign country they shall be applicable to the products of such country, whether imported directly from the country of production or otherwise.

Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act, 1930

SEC. 336. Equalization of costs of production: (a) Change of classification or duties: In order to put into force and effect the policy of Congress by this act intended, the Commission (1) upon the request of the President, or (2) upon resolution of either or both Houses of Congress, or (3) upon its own motion, or (4) when in the judgment of the Commission there is good and sufficient reason therefor, upon application of any interested party, shall investigate the differences in the costs of production of any domestic article and of any like or similar foreign article. In the course of the investigation the Commission shall hold hearings and give reasonable public notice thereof, and shall afford reasonable opportunity for parties interested to be present, to produce evidence, and to be heard at such hearings. The Commission is authorized to adopt such reasonable procedure and rules and regulations as it deems necessary to execute its functions under this section. The Commission shall report to the President the results of the investigation and its findings with respect to such differences in costs of production. If the Commission finds it shown by the investigation that the duties expressly fixed by statute do not equalize the differences in the costs of production of the domestic article and the like or similar foreign article when produced in the principal competing country, the Commission shall specify in its report such increases or decreases in rates of duty expressly fixed by statute (including any necessary change in classification) as it finds shown by the investigation to be necessary to equalize such differences. In no case shall the total increase or decrease of such rates of duty exceed 50 percent of the rates expressly fixed by statute.

(b) Change to American selling price: If the Commission finds upon any such investigation that such differences cannot be equalized by proceeding as hereinbefore provided, it shall so state in its report to the President and shall specify therein such ad valorem rates of duty based upon the American selling price (as defined in sec. 402 (g)) of the domestic article as it finds shown by the investigation to be necessary to equalize such differences. In no case shall the total decrease of such rates of duty exceed 50 percent of the rates expressly fixed by statute, and no such rate shall be increased.

(c) Proclamation by the President: The President by proclamation shall approve the rates of duty and changes in classification and in basis of value specified in any report of the Commission under this section, if in his judgment such rates of duty and changes are shown by such investigation of the Commission to be necessary to equalize such differences in costs of production.

(d) Effective date of rates and changes: Commencing 30 days after the date of any Presidential proclamation of approval, the increased or decreased rates of duty and changes in classification or in basis of value specified in the report of the Commission shall take effect.

(e) Ascertainment of differences in costs of production: In ascertaining under this section the differences in costs of production the Commission shall take into consideration, insofar as it finds it practicable:

(1) In the case of a domestic article: (A) The cost of production as hereinafter in this section defined; (B) transportation costs and other costs incident to delivery to the principal market or markets of the United States for the article; and (C) other relevant factors that constitute an advantage or disadvantage in competition.

(2) In the case of a foreign article: (A) The cost of production as hereinafter in this section defined, or, if the Commission finds that such cost is not readily ascertainable, the Commission may accept as evidence thereof, or as supplemental thereto, the weighted average of the invoice prices or values for a representative period and/or the average wholesale selling price for a representative period (which price shall be that at which the article is freely offered for sale to all purchasers in the principal market or markets of the principal competing country or countries in the ordinary course of trade and in the usual wholesale quantities in such market or markets); (B) transportation costs and other costs incident to delivery to the principal market or markets of the United States for the article; (C) other relevant factors that constitute an advantage or disadvantage in competition, including advantages granted to the foreign producers by a government, person, partnership, corporation, or association in a foreign country.

SEC. 338. Discrimination by foreign countries: (a) Additional duties: The President, when he finds that the public interest will be served thereby, shall by proclamation specify and declare new or additional duties as hereinafter provided upon articles wholly or in part the growth or product of, or imported in a vessel of, any foreign country whenever he shall find as a fact that such country—

(1) Imposes, directly or indirectly, upon the disposition in or transportation in transit through or reexportation from such country of any article wholly or in part the growth or product of the United States any unreasonable charge, exaction, regulation, or limitation which is not equally enforced upon the like articles of every foreign country; or

(2) Discriminates in fact against the commerce of the United States, directly or indirectly, by law or administrative regulation or practice, by or in respect to any customs, tonnage, or port duty, fee, charge, exaction, classification, regulation, condition, restriction, or prohibition, in such manner as to place the commerce of the United States at a disadvantage compared with the commerce of any foreign country.

(b) Exclusion from importation: If at any time the President shall find it to be a fact that any foreign country has not only discriminated against the commerce of the United States, as aforesaid, but has, after the issuance of a proclamation as authorized in subdivision (a) of this section, maintained or increased its said discriminations against the commerce of the United States, the President is hereby authorized, if he deems it consistent with the interests of the United States, to issue a further proclamation directing that such products of said country or such articles imported in its vessels as he shall deem consistent with the public interests shall be excluded from importation into the United States.

(3) Application of proclamation: Any proclamation issued by the President under the authority of this section shall, if he deems it consistent with the interests of the United States, extend to the whole of any foreign country or may be confined to any subdivision or subdivisions thereof; and the President shall, whenever he deems the public interests require, suspend, revoke, supplement, or amend any such proclamation.

(d) Duties to offset commercial disadvantages: When the President shall find as a fact that any foreign country places any burden or disadvantage upon the commerce of the United States by any of the unequal impositions or discriminations aforesaid, he shall, when he finds that the public interest will be served thereby, by proclamation specify and declare such new or additional rate or rates of duty as he shall determine will offset such burden or disadvantage, not to exceed 50 percent ad valorem or its equivalent on any products of or on articles imported in a vessel of such foreign country, and 30 days after the date of such proclamation there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon the articles enumerated in such proclamation when imported into the United States from such foreign country such new or additional rate or rates of duty, or, in case of articles declared subject to exclusion from importation into the United States under the provisions of subdivision (b) of this section, such articles shall be excluded from importation.

(e) Duties to offset benefits to third country: Whenever the President shall find as a fact that any foreign country imposes any unequal imposition or discrimination as aforesaid upon the commerce of the United States, or that any benefits accrue or are likely to accrue to any industry in any foreign country by reason of any such imposition or discrimination imposed by any foreign country other than the foreign country in which such industry is located, and when the President shall determine that any new or additional rate or rates of duty or any prohibition hereinbefore provided for do not effectively remove such imposition or discrimination and that any benefits from any such imposition or discrimination accrue or are likely to accrue to any industry in any foreign country, he shall, when he finds that the public interest will be served thereby, by proclamation specify and declare such new or additional rate or rates of duty upon the articles wholly or in part the growth or product of any such industry as he shall determine will offset such benefits, not to exceed 50 percent ad valorem or its equivalent, upon importation from any foreign country into the United States of such articles; and on and after 30 days after the date of any such proclamation such new or additional rate or rates of duty so specified and declared in such proclamation shall be levied, collected, and paid upon such articles.

ANALYSIS OF INCREASE IN UNITED STATES IMPORTS IN 1936 OVER 1935

United States imports for consumption in 1936 totaled $2,421,000,000, an increase of $382,000,000 over imports in the year 1935. This increase may be explained in a number of different ways. One method is to determine the products principally involved and analyze the possible reasons for the increased trade in them. Another method, and the one which is used in this instance, is to segregate the principal items into groups, depending upon the nature of the products and the tariff status, with particular reference to any changes which may have occurred during 1935–36. (The items considered in these groups have been limited to those showing increases of $2,000,000 or more each for the year 1936 and account for $321,000,000, or nearly 90 percent, of the $382,000,000 increase.) On this basis there appears to be three groups: (1) Principally raw materials mostly free of duty, (2) manufactured products mostly dutiable in which no change in duty has been made recently, and (3) a miscellaneous group of commodities including products upon which tariff rates have been changed.

Groups 1 and 2, following, show increases of $222,000,000 and account for nearly 60 percent of the total increase. For these groups, therefore, the changes which have occurred have been due to factors other than the tariff. Rubber, the item showing the most important increase, represents an increase in value rather than an increase in quantity—the value having increased over 33 percent and the quantity less than 5 percent as compared with 1935. The second largest item is undressed furs, which are free of duty, and since these imports go into the manufacture of luxury articles, the increase undoubtedly resulted from increased purchasing power in this country. This may also be said of precious stones, which show an increase of $11,000,000 in 1936. Imports of wheat in 1936 showed an increase in value of $18,000,000 over imports in 1935. Our imports of wheat under normal conditions are neligible except wheat imported for milling in bond and export. There was no marked change in this latter class during 1936, but wheat for human consumption and as feed increased considerably, owing to the lessened production in this country and lessened stocks on hand. The imports of wheat for human consumption consisted principally of hard spring wheat imported from Canada for blending with softer wheats in the milling of bread flour.

Imports of paper base stock, principally wood pulp and pulpwood, and newsprint paper amounted to $196,000,000 in 1936 as compared with $164,000,000 in 1935, an increase of $32,000,000. These products are free of duty, and the rise in imports is accounted for by the increased consumption of paper and paperboard in this country. The larger imports of newsprint supplement domestic production which has been declining for some period. Newsprint and wood pulp were bound on the free list in the trade agreement with Canada, and pulpwood was bound on the free list under the Swedish, Canadian, and Finnish agreements.

As a result of the greatly increased demand for wool in this country without a corresponding increase in domestic production, and the increase in wool prices, imports of wool in 1936 were $24,000,000 greater than in 1935. Imports of carpet wools, while less in quantity than in 1935, accounted for $5,000,000 of the total increase in the value of wool imports, and combing wools accounted for nearly all of the remainder.

Other items in these two groups which showed substantial increases were: jute, manila, and sisal, principally raw materials which are not produced domestically. Imports of these commodities increased $10,000,000 in 1936, largely as a result of increased demands in this market for the products manufactured from these fibers.

Hides and skins, only about one-third of which are dutiable, increased $9,000,000 in value in 1936. This is attributable principally to the greatly increased production of leather footwear in this country.

Meat products, principally canned beef from South America, increased $6,000,000 in 1936. There is practically no commercial production of canned beef in the United States.

Cocoa beans, the imports of which increased approximately $5,000,000 during 1936, have entered in larger quantities in recent months, probably in anticipation of further increases in prices.

Items comprising groups 1 and 2 are shown in the following tabulations:

GROUP 1.—Principally raw materials mostly free of duty—increase in 1936 over 1935

Rubber	$40,000,000
Undressed furs	25,000,000
Paper base stock and newsprint	32,000,000
Jute, manila, sisal, etc., unmanufactured	10,000,000
Hides and skins	9,000,000
Coco beans	5,000,000
Tin	6,000,000
Silk	7,000,000
Fertilizer and fertilizer materials	5,000,000
Total	139,000,000

GROUP 2.—Manufactured products mostly dutiable in which no change in duty has been made recently—increase in 1936 over 1935

Meat products	$6,000,000
Petroleum and products	3,000,000
Wheat	18,000,000
Flaxseed	2,000,000
Expressed oils	9,000,000
Unmanufactured cotton	5,000,000
Wool	24,000,000
Precious stones, etc	11,000,000
Nickel metal and alloys	5,000,000
Total	83,000,000

Group 3, following, consists of commodities, the considerable part of which have been subject to changes in rates of duty. The principal items comprising this group are sugar, whisky, and manufactures of wool, these three items alone accounting for more than 50 percent of the $118,000,000 increase in this group.

Imports of whisky increased $31,000,000 in 1936 over the preceding year and were supplied almost entirely by Canada and the United Kingdom. Greater demand in this country for aged whiskies and the reduction in the duty were the principal factors accounting for this increase. The duty on whisky was reduced 50 percent, to $2.50 per proof-gallon under the Canadian agreement.

The duty on sugar was reduced in June 1934 under section 336 and again under the Cuban agreement effective September 1934. Sugar imports increased $23,000,000 in 1936, all of the trade being subject to quota regulations. The increase may be attributed to greater consumption of this commodity in this country.

Manufactures of wool increased $10,000,000 in 1936. Some changes in duties on these products have been made, but the duties on the principal items, including blankets, woolens, and worsteds, overcoats, and wool felt-hat bodies, have remained unchanged, and therefore the increased trade has come about largely because of the revival in business conditions in this country, accompanied by an increase in the demand for high-grade woolens. Manufactures of wool on which there have been duty reductions include: Angora rabbit hair yarn, woven green billiard cloths, paper-makers' felts, knit fabric, knit underwear, and knit hats, but the combined imports of these articles during the first 11 months of 1936 were valued at less than imports during the first 11 months of 1935.

Imports of ferro-alloys and related ores increased $8,000,000 in 1936 and reflect the general increased demand for alloys for use in steel and other metal production. Alloys on which there have been duty reductions include manganese, chromium, and silicon, the imports of which showed only slight increases during the first 11 months of 1936 over a similar period in 1935. The bulk of the increase is accounted for by the larger imports of manganese ore, on which the duty was reduced 50 percent under the Brazilian agreement. The increase in this important raw material is in line with the generally improved conditions in the steel industry.

Cotton manufactures, the imports of which increased about $7,000,000 in 1936 over 1935, comprise principally cotton cloth, cotton floor coverings, and pile fabrics. The increased imports of cotton cloth came in principally during the first 6 months of 1936 before the duty was increased by proclamation of the President under section 336. Imports of cotton floor coverings have also shown a substantial increase in trade. The principal factor probably has been the reduced trade restrictions on imports of imitation oriental rugs upon which the duty was reduced in the Belgian trade agreement, and still further reduced at a later date by removal of the restrictions imposed under section 3 (e) of the National Industrial Recovery Act. Imports of pile fabrics have been particularly heavy this year from Japan, and this matter is now being investigated by the Tariff Commission. There has been relatively little increase in the imports of certain fine cloths upon which the duty was reduced in the trade agreement with Switzerland. However, since this agreement became effective in June, the period is too short upon which to base any conclusions as to the effect of this change.

The commodities discussed above and other items comprising this group are shown in the following tabulation:

GROUP 3.—Miscellaneous group of commodities, including products upon which tariff rates have been changed—increase in 1936 over 1935

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired. All time has expired, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the period during which the President is authorized to enter into foreign-trade agreements under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended by the act (Public, No. 316, 73d Cong.) approved June 12, 1934, is hereby extended for a further period of 3 years from June 12, 1937.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. REED of New York: Line 8, before the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no foreign trade agreement entered into under the provisions of this act shall become effective until submitted to the Congress by the President and approved by both House and Senate by a majority vote. The vote on such agreement shall be taken within 20 days after the President submits the agreement to the Congress. In the event that Congress shall fail to act within such period of 20 days, then said agreement shall thereupon be in full force and effect."

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that amendment is not germane to the bill. It entirely changes the object of the bill and for the first time brings back to the House of Representatives an act of the Executive to be ratified, not by the Senate alone, but by the House. I submit that amendment would entirely change the intent of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair the amendment submitted by the gentleman from New York places a limitation upon the President. The pending joint resolution proposes a grant of discretionary power to the Executive by the Congress, and, therefore, this limitation in the judgment of the Chair is germane. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, we have delegated vast legislative power to the Executive. We have been doing that for some time. I want to see the people of my district, and I believe you want to see the people of your districts, have every safeguard thrown around their interests that foreign governments insist be thrown around theirs in these trade agreements. I am just wondering how closely the Members of this House have studied the Canadian trade agreement. We are particularly interested in that trade agreement up in New York, especially so in western New York. We are on the border. The whole Canadian line along there is a showcase for foreign goods. Our people can cross the border in a few minutes and each can bring back free of duty $100 worth of purchases in Canada. It runs into the millions of dollars every year. We have entered into a trade agreement to break down these barriers that have been some protection to the people of our districts. The dairy sections and the fruit sections edge up onto the Canadian border, and, contrary to the promise of the President when he was a candidate for office, tariffs on agricultural products have been reduced. When we entered into this trade agreement with Canada, in an exchange of letters between Secretary Hull and the Canadian authorities, Canada reserved the legislative right to her people, if impinged upon by imports, to appeal to the tariff board to grant redress to her people. That is a part of the treaty. That is ratified. It is recognized under the proclamation. They have thrown the mantle of protection around their people who may be injured by imports, and what have we done? We have bartered away every right, even the right of appeal, by delegating our legislative functions to a star-chamber proceeding. All I ask in the amendment offered is that our people shall have the right through their chosen representatives, chosen by them to represent them in legislative matters, to have the same protection that the foreign governments have reserved to their people, and that we permitted them to reserve. I hope that for the protection of our people you will vote for this amendment and give our people a chance to protect themselves from the imports from Canada, just as Canada under this trade agreement is protecting her people by writing it into the treaty. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York. The gentleman stated that what he wants is a safeguard. The real truth is what he wants is to kill the legislation under consideration. The adoption of this amendment could have only one practical effect, and that is to defeat the entire program sought to be extended by the resolution under consideration. During the course of my remarks on this measure last Friday I undertook to give the House the benefit of the experience that we have had in this country on the question of treaties and agreements that required ratification and those that did not require ratification, and to very briefly review this experience I invite your attention to the following facts: There were 13 treaties under the general treaty-making power of the President, of which 10 failed. There were 11 treaties negotiated under special statutory provisions of the act of 1897, known as the Dingley Act, and 11 of these failed of ratification. Therefore, we have 24 treaties of that type which required ratification that were negotiated, and 21 out of the 24 failed and never became effective. On the other hand, we negotiated 13 agreements which did not require ratification under the act of 1890, referred to as the McKinley Act. One of these failed by nonratification by the foreign country and the other 12 became effective. Nine agreements were negotiated under special provisions of the act of 1897, known as the Dingley Act, and all became effective. Fifteen agreements have been negotiated under this act which we now seek to extend, and 14 of them have already become effective, and the other will within a short time.

Therefore, we have this score as between agreements or treaties requiring ratification and those not requiring it. Of those that required ratification 21 out of 24 failed and never became effective. On the other hand, 36 out of 37 negotiated which did not require ratification, became effective. Therefore, it will readily be seen that the only purpose to be accomplished by the adoption of such an amendment as that proposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] is to defeat this program.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I beg the gentleman's pardon. In the limited time I have I cannot yield.

We know that many other countries of the world, by reason of the nature of their parliamentary procedure, are able take quick and prompt action on matters of this kind. The situation is vastly different in this country of ours, where our parliamentary procedure is along very different lines. Those other countries are equipped to give prompt consideration to matters of this kind. One of the underlying reasons which called for the enactment of this legislation in the beginning was the fact that most of the other countries could accomplish results in a very short time, and all kinds of trade barriers were raised against the commerce of this country. Because of the nature of our tariff making in this country, quick action could not be taken. Therefore, our foreign trade was constantly declining and had reached the vanishing point.

So I insist that the adoption of this amendment would have the same practical effect as striking out the enacting clause of this resolution, and I appeal to the House to vote down the amendment.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I did not intend to say anything, but I am a little surprised at the argument made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER], who usually bases his arguments upon reason. Today he has based his argument upon numbers. He concludes that, because a given number of treaties have become effective under the present law, therefore, it is a good law. He concludes that, because a number of treaties under other laws were discarded, therefore those procedural laws were bad. Now, there is certainly no logic in that. We might divide on the treaty on the League of Nations, for instance. The merits of the controversy had nothing to do with the authority of the Senate to consider the treaty. The number of treaties or agreements approved or rejected by the Senate is not a criterion of the wisdom of the laws permitting the Senate to act. The Congress speaks for the people, and the Constitution contemplates that the people shall approve all treaties with foreign nations.

It seems to me that the American people can always be trusted if and when the American people are fully advised. I do not think there are many people in this body today who would ratify the League of Nations if they had an opportunity to do so, yet had it not been necessary for Senate ratification this country would have joined the League of Nations. To my mind, that is one of the best reasons why these treaties affecting industry in America should be submitted to the representatives of the American people and passed upon in the Senate.

This amendment provides a limitation. The ratifying bodies must vote within 20 days. What material harm can come from this short delay? If the proposed treaty is inimical to our best interest, those to be affected should have the right to say so. This is the American way.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. ANDREWS. Does not the gentleman think just as much could be accomplished along the line of his argument if ratification was left simply to the Senate and not to the House?

Mr. MICHENER. I would be perfectly willing to follow the Constitution and the custom of the past, if you please, and let those matters be discussed and ratified by the Senate, with the limitation that the Senate must come to a vote within 20 days. During that 20 days the American people might be fully advised as to what was taking place.

Now, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] called attention to the fact that in some countries they could ratify because under their parliamentary situation a vote could be brought speedily. He says here it is interminable; but, with this 20-day limit, surely we meet that requirement, so far as expedition is concerned.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. COOPER. How about the long period of time when Congress is not even in session? How will the 20 days work when Congress is not in session?

Mr. MICHENER. Congress adjourns, let us say, the 1st of June and it meets again in January. I say the President of the United States can so arrange these treaties that 3 or 4 months will make no difference. I think a little deliberation on our part, a little deliberation so far as legislation is concerned, is an almighty good thing always.

Again I call attention to the fact that today we probably would be a member of the League of Nations were it not for the fortitude of a few men in the United States Senate who had the courage, who had the morality, to stand up and make a fight until the American people knew what it was all about, and then the American people spoke. [Applause.]

We all agree that the tariff should be taken out of politics, if possible. When the Democratic convention in Chicago in 1932 accepted the Republican traditional position of a protective tariff, representing the difference between cost of production at home and abroad, I felt that we were making progress. With the flexible provisions of the tariff law, permitting the Tariff Commission to find the facts as to these relative costs, and with the President clothed with the authority to raise or lower the tariff rates fixed by the Congress, it seemed that a practical solution of the problem had been reached. Under that arrangement, the industries to be affected, as well as the consumer who might be taxed, were all given abundant opportunity to be heard.

I think I agree with President McKinley's speech, made in September 1901, when he said:

> By sensible trade agreements which will not interrupt our home production we shall extend the outlets for our increasing surplus. * * * We must not repose in fancied security that we can forever sell everything and buy little or nothing. * * * We should take from our customers such of their products as we can use without harm to our industries and labor.

This excerpt from that splendid tariff speech is often quoted by the advocates of the present reciprocal-trade-agreement law, but I want to call attention that it was the view of President McKinley, as expressed in that speech, that "we should take from our customers such of their products as we can use without harm to our industries and labor." In short, in making these agreements with foreign nations, we should use as trading stock the commodities which we do not produce and which do not come into competition with our industries, our farmers, and, consequently, with our labor.

These trade agreements may be beneficial to both parties, provided we have something to trade, and do not trade away our birthrights. Under the trade agreements that have already been made under this law, it seems to me that the administration has bartered concessions on highly competitive articles, only securing in return concessions on our export commodities. Everybody is for increasing our foreign trade, but what would it benefit this country to increase its foreign trade if by so doing we destroy our basic agricultural industry? A job is a job, and there is nothing gained when you trade away a farmer's job for a factory worker's job.

We who live on our northern border possibly know more about the practical working of the trade agreement with Canada than do many of the other Members of this body. We realize that agricultural exports to Canada increased by $7,809,000 in the first 10 months of 1936 over the corresponding period of 1935. That increase is almost equally divided between agricultural products on which we have received concessions and all other agricultural products. On the other hand, our agricultural imports from Canada in the same period increased by $29,127,000, the increased imports of those on which duties were reduced under the agreement being almost as large as the entire increase in our exports.

No wonder that the farmers in my country object to these concessions to Canadian agriculture, when we realize that under the Canadian treaty we reduced the duties on cattle, cream, corn, lima beans, tomatoes, cucumbers, potatoes, apples, green peas, canned peas, poultry live or dead, to mention but a few items of the increased imports to which the American farmer is subjected.

Now, I know that the tariff is in many instances a local issue and surely the farmers in my locality will in the end pay the price for this Canadian treaty. It is well to think nationally; but too many of our people in the present administration give more attention to international thought. It would be fine if all the world could prosper and have the same standards of living that we enjoy in America. We may talk about the brotherhood of man, and so forth, but, after all, self-preservation is the first law of nature, and we cannot help foreign nations to attain our standards by pulling down those very standards of living.

We have not heard so much about the "iniquitous Smoot-Hawley tariff bill" in this debate. Possibly there is a reason. We were told in the campaign of 1932 that if our Democratic friends came into power, they would immediately get rid of that law. Up to this good hour, although our friends have been in control of the complete Federal Government for more than 4 years, not a single thing has been done to repeal or to get away from the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill, excepting in the agreements made under the reciprocal-trade law.

Yes, things in the country are better than they were. Our exports have increased, but our imports have increased to a much greater degree. In fact, our total imports in the first 11 months of 1936 represented 17-percent increase over the corresponding period of 1934, whereas exports increased only 8 percent over 1934. Dr. Sayre, who appeared before the Ways and Means Committee, representing the Department of State, and asking for the continuance of this legislation, among other things, said:

> In 1935–36 our exports of agricultural commodities accounted, at average yields, for nearly 28,000,000 acres of productive land.

Now, that sounds fine, but Dr. Sayre did not tell the committee that our imports of agricultural commodities in 1935–36 amounted to approximately 30,000,000 acres of productive land. That may be Yankee trading, but I do not see its advantage—to the farmers at least. The hearing discloses that duties on more than 80 farm products have been reduced since this act was put into effect, and in not one case has the duty been increased, and I have been unable to find a single instance where the duty has been increased on products that are imported into this country that compete with the products of agriculture.

Agriculture is represented in Washington by several large organizations. These organizations presume to speak for agriculture on legislative matters, and it is interesting to note that the National Grange, the National Farmers' Union, the National Cooperative Milk Production Federation, the National Cooperative Council, and the National Dairy Union all appeared before the committee and all were diametrically opposed to the renewal of these trade agreements as provided for in this legislation and without amendments. The American Farm Bureau Federation, at its annual conference on December 11, 1936, took a similar position, and I think we all realize that Mr. Edward O'Neal, the president of this organization, is an outstanding supporter and advocate of the present administration. On the other hand, the National Chamber of Commerce appeared before the committee asking a continuance of this power in the President to make these agreements.

One trouble with the tariff in the past has been that it was beneficial to the manufacturer and industry in general, while it did not work and does not work for the benefit of certain farm commodities where there is an exportable surplus. Both political parties have for a number of years been promising to give agriculture parity with other industries; that is, we have promised to make the tariff, which protects the manufacturer, effective as to the farmer. The way the authority granted in this law has been used by the President and the Department of State, so far as agriculture is concerned, has not been in keeping with those promises. The farmer has been traded off, as has been so often the case in the past. We may talk as much as we like, but farm prosperity will not be restored in this country until the farmer receives a fair price for a full crop. In other words, parity price means nothing unless it also includes parity income.

If I read the hearings before the Committee on Ways and Means correctly, the Secretary of State placed more stress on the effect these treaties will have on world peace than on economics. Many industrial authorities—men qualified to speak on such matters—take a different view, however. For instance, Bernard Baruch has stated that in case of war, these treaties would be an instrument of dispute and contention rather than an instrument of conciliation.

I want it understood that I am in no sense objecting to doing any legitimate thing that will advance and increase our foreign trade, but I am just as much opposed to entering into any agreements that violate Washington's farewell address and that directly or indirectly will involve this country in entangling world alliances.

The majority of the people whom I represent are very much opposed to the method of making these treaties. We feel that somewhere, somehow, some place along the line the average man engaged in agriculture or industry should have an opportunity for a free and open hearing in order that he might present his claims, his views, and his necessities, before his Government enters into any agreements or contracts that will destroy him economically. Under existing arrangements there is no such forum. True, a sort of hearing is held before a committee set up by the Department of State, and until the treaty with Ecuador was given consideration it was impossible to have any idea as to what commodities were being discussed by the negotiators on behalf of this country, and we have no assurance that if this law is continued for a period of 3 years the bureaucrats down in the Department of State will even concede that much to American people in the future.

There should be safeguards, and the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] will make it possible for all of our people to have some knowledge about what the agreement contains before our country becomes bound. It is serious to contemplate the thought that our Department of State can enter into an agreement with foreign nations, affecting vitally the everyday life of all of our people; that this is done in secret; that no one knows what has been done and has no way of knowing until the President's name is affixed to the contract and we are bound.

It has been said that these agreements have not been in effect long enough so that we know their real purport. Possibly this is true; and if the formula can be changed and modified so that the Senate at least can give consideration for 10 or 20 days to a proposed agreement, then there would be some protection of our people. The world has Hitlers and Mussolinis. They are dictators. In those countries the people need not worry about such things as treaties and government. The dictators will look out for that. And this law, giving the Executive the right to make agreements of this kind, approaches very closely to dictatorial power. I, for one, am not willing to turn over the constitutional functions of government to any President.

The existing law should not be extended for a period of 3 years in its present form. Safeguards should be placed in the law providing that no foreign agricultural commodity should be permitted to enter this country under trade agreements unless the tariff rate is high enough to represent the difference between the cost of production of the commodity in the country from which it comes and the cost of production of the commodity in this country plus a reasonable profit. There should also be provision made in the law for ratification of the agreements by the Senate and that specific notice should be given by the Department of State naming commodities being considered in connection with any proposed trade agreements.

Much good can come out of proper reciprocal-trade agreements based on William McKinley's conception, as previously stated; and again I say, "We should take from our customers such of their products as we can use without harm to our industries and labor."

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] was not speaking to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED]. The amendment offered by the gentleman from New York proposed ratification by both the House and the Senate. The gentleman from Michigan proposes ratification by the Senate only. So the gentlemen on that side do not seem to be agreed at all as to how they would like to have this matter handled.

It is perfectly evident, and everyone knows that if the matter had been brought back to Congress, hearings would have to be held. It would not be worth anything unless hearings were had and different interests were brought here and testified before the committee. Witnesses come to present their views. There must be a hearing before a committee, for there cannot be hearings before the House. That is not permissible. People would come here from all sections of the country to be heard on the effect of the trade agreement on their section of the country. Suppose a dozen came and wanted to be heard; it would take 2 or 3 days to hear half a dozen. Suppose then a hundred came and wanted to be heard. We could not shut them off; we would have to give them all the same opportunity. Everyone who is familiar with it at all knows that this is only a subtle move to kill the whole bill. The gentleman from Tennessee has shown the effect of attempting ratification by even one body.

What is the use of taking months and months in negotiating treaties whereby we may export our surpluses and import the surpluses of other countries that do not in any way adversely affect our industry or agriculture and then having them nullified by Congress? Everyone knows that in 20 days you could not get started toward ratification.

I am astonished that the gentleman from New York should propose an amendment of this kind. His view of an intelligent handling of the matter is to leave it entirely to the Congress, let Congress negotiate these treaties, let both House and Senate pass on them, get all the information necessary. This would require 20 months instead of 20 days, and would result in absolutely nothing being done.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. I thought it was the contention of the gentleman from North Carolina that a full hearing had been given, that under your authority to do that a full and complete hearing is given before this board or agency set up for the purpose. The gentleman now is intimating that no hearing has been given and is basing his argument upon the ground that the American people should be entitled to a hearing and that they could not have ample time in 20 days. I do not care whether it takes 20 days or 20 weeks, I feel that the American people are entitled to, and should have, somewhere along the line, a hearing.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Hearings are afforded by those negotiating these agreements. The longer it would take, of course, the better it would suit the gentleman, because his sole purpose is to kill this legislation.

Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be voted down.

Mr. KNUTSON and Mr. McCORMACK rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from North Carolina twits us because we on this side of the aisle are not in full agreement on this subject. We are at a disadvantage because we have no one down at the other end of the Avenue to do our thinking for us. [Applause.] The gentleman seems to be very much concerned because we are trying to protect the rights of the American people instead of delegating power in an un-American way to somebody down at the State Department, we know not whom, to negotiate these treaties in star-chamber sessions. The gentleman objects because we want open covenants, openly arrived at, that we are un-American, that we are trying to kill a beneficial piece of legislation. I say to the gentleman that is not true at all, but we refuse to be rubber stamps. [Applause.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, my main purpose is to keep the record straight, because of the tendency to refer to past statements. What we say today may be referred to in the future if any legal or other question should arise relating to this bill, and particularly if our Republican colleagues undertake to present to the people erroneous impressions of the true evidence relating to the pending amendment.

When the Dingley bill was passed in the late nineties the Republican Party was in control. This bill provides for Executive treaties and Executive agreements. Under the Executive treaty provision of the law 14 treaties were made. The law required that the treaties be approved by the United States Senate. Thirteen of these treaties were submitted to the Senate, but not one was approved. The fourteenth treaty was never presented by the President, and wisely and properly so, because he knew it would not be ratified. Experience as a result of that law shows us that if an Executive agreement must be confirmed by the Senate it will never be accomplished; and that is what the pending amendment would effectuate. No trade agreement would be ratified.

We are practical men. We realize as a result of that experience confirmation of Executive agreements cannot be accomplished. With such a provision in this bill it would be ineffective and not capable of operation. We are living in a very complex economic era. Changes are rapidly taking place. Other governments are making executive agreements. It is to the advantage, in the emergency of our country, to have a situation existing where Executive agreements can be entered into. To adopt the pending amendment would defeat this bill. As my distinguished friend from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] has so well and eloquently said, the experience of the Dingley Act clearly shows that where confirmation or ratification is required by the Senate that Executive agreements cannot be made. It would be more difficult under this amendment.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. ANDREWS. Is it not true that in the case of 13 out of the 15 agreements it has been necessary to secure ratification by the legislatures of the foreign governments with which we were dealing?

Mr. McCORMACK. The situation in those governments is somewhat different.

Mr. ANDREWS. Where is there any great difference?

Mr. McCORMACK. Oh, the gentleman knows as well as I do that there is an entirely different situation.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman want this country to be like other countries; that is, under the will of a dictator? I do not believe he does. I do not.

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course, I agree with the gentlewoman, and there is no danger of that.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. It might be pointed out that under the McKinley—the Dingley Act and under the flexible tariff provisions themselves it is not necessary to bring it back to Congress. If anyone wants a good argument against the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, he should read the strong statement that the gentleman from Massachusetts made on this same subject when the Smoot-Hawley bill was up here for consideration.

THE GENERALIZATION OF THE TRADE-AGREEMENT CONCESSIONS

Mr. McCORMACK. The United States extends the concessions which it grants in a trade agreement with one country to all other countries which, on their part, are not discriminating against American trade. This means that imports into the United States of a certain product from all nondiscriminating countries pay the same rate of duty. The concession is, of course, of chief value to the country to which it was originally given, for concessions in trade agreements are granted, in general, to the principal supplier of the product in question.

The extension of the trade-agreement concessions is a bargain, for the United States insists that it receive in return all favors which the other countries have given or may in future give to all foreign countries; in other words, they must extend their concessions to the United States. The United States has been in the trade-agreement business for only a short time; other countries have been practicing it energetically for decades. Compared to the host of concessions that they have made, we have made relatively few. Hence many countries have now two, or even more, rates of duty for the great majority of the goods which they import; we have two rates for only a small proportion of the goods we import. Yet we have been able, by adherence to the most-favored-nation policy, to swap our relatively few lower rates for their great number of lower rates, which, if they wished, they could withhold from us. It would be hard to find a better bargain than this, from the point of view of the United States.

It makes no difference whether a country has a most-favored-nation treaty or agreement with us. A country does not get our lowest rates unless it in fact gives us its lowest rates. A most-favored-nation agreement is simply a formal pledge to grant nondiscriminatory treatment; it spells out in detail what nondiscriminatory treatment means with respect to the types of trade control applied by the countries entering into the agreement, in order that there may be as few misunderstandings as possible in practice. But if a country is discriminating against us, we can terminate our most-favored-nation obligation with it—as we have done in the case of Germany—and withhold the extension of our concessions to it. And if a country is in fact giving us nondiscriminatory treatment, we must in our own interest extend our concessions to it, whether we have a most-favored-nation agreement with it or not, for if we do not do so, it will probably not continue to extend its concessions to us.

The policy laid down in the Trade Agreements Act excludes any legalistic or formalistic interpretation of discrimination and most-favored-nation treatment, and makes the extension of the trade-agreement concessions dependent upon the treatment which other countries are in fact granting to the trade of the United States.

The difference between the maximum and minimum tariff rates in foreign countries, as well as the intermediate rates where such exist, is frequently very large. American exports would be seriously affected, and in a substantial part destroyed, if the maximum rates were levied on our goods, as would almost certainly be the case if we did not extend our trade-agreement concessions to these countries; that is to say, if we levied our maximum rates upon their goods.

The following are a few examples chosen at random of the treatment certain of our products now receive in foreign countries compared to the treatment which they probably would receive if we did not extend our concessions to these countries:

Grains and preparations when imported into Belgium are admitted free of duty; if the maximum rates were applied, they would pay 7.50 francs a quintal. Similar products imported into France would have the tariff doubled if the maximum duties were applied. Cotton when imported into Spain pays 1.30 pesetas a kilogram. It would pay 2.50 pesetas, or twice as much, under the maximum tariff. Petroleum and products in most foreign countries would pay duties two to four times higher if the maximum tariffs were applied. The duties on lumber and timber products would be from 8 to 10 times greater under the maximum rates. Machinery and tools would pay three times as much duty in Belgium and various types of machinery would pay four times as much in France under the maximum rates. In general, all products exported to Spain would pay from two to three times as much duty under the maximum rates. These are but examples of the type of benefits we receive through the extension of our concessions to the countries concerned.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, I cannot let this occasion go by without calling attention to the conditions which exist in the part of the United States that I have the honor to represent in this body. First, I wish to say that I yield to no Member in this House with respect to his confidence in the Chief Executive and his doing the right thing wherever we give him authority, and I am personally willing to give him all the authority that he chooses to exercise in connection with these treaties, or any other matter.

I call attention to the fact, Mr. Chairman, in my part of the country, and in my district, that the only industry we have is the livestock industry, consisting of cattle and sheep, and more particularly cattle. Our cattlemen are broke. We sold cattle during the year 1932 for as low as 2 cents a pound, and beef cattle went over the scales in part of Montana and on to the Chicago market for 3 cents, as fine beef cattle as were ever shipped. Moreover, during the last year we have sold very fine beef cattle over the scales in Montana for as low as 4 cents per pound.

My people have been hit by 7 continuous years of drought, as well as the grasshopper plague. In other words, we in Montana and in my district are up against the cold steel.

Mr. WEARIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. WEARIN. Does the gentleman from Montana realize that the price index today and in 1936 of every major agricultural commodity produced is substantially higher under the reciprocal trade agreements than in 1932 under the Smoot-Hawley Act?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. That, of course, is true, but that is not the question.

Mr. Chairman, if the quota that has been agreed to between this country and Canada is permitted to remain as it is, namely, in the neighborhood of 155,000 head of cattle, weighing 700 pounds, it will be disastrous the way it is handled. Remember that in 1934 there were only 68,000 came in. In the first 11 months of 1936, 157,000 came in. That is a small percentage of the number slaughtered throughout the United States. But 70 percent of these cattle came in 4 months.

Mr. Chairman, I am going to ask the Members of the House to help benefit my particular part of the United States. I know what I am talking about, because I am a producer of beef myself. I may say I could not produce beef cattle at the present price, and at prices we have been getting for grass-fed beef during the last 5 years. If I had not had a lucrative law practice I could not have raised cattle. I paid the deficit out of my law practice. The main taxpayers of Montana are the cattle and sheep growers.

I want this protection from the Congress, because the Members are very seriously interested in my part of the country as they are interested in all parts of the United States. I want you to help me secure a restriction of the number of cattle that may be put on the American market by Canada or any other country to so many per month; possibly 10 percent per month of the quota.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The Canadian treaty is an issue in my State as well as in the State from which the gentleman comes, but 155,000 cattle imported into this country in a year is scarcely 1 percent of the domestic consumption of the United States, which is about 20,000,000, and I therefore cannot comprehend how less than 1 percent can beat down the market value of cattle in this country.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I will inform the gentleman how it is done.

If the present quota of cattle is to be maintained, they should be imported under a restriction of 10 percent per month. Such importation would not then be so damaging to the stock interests of the Western States. In 1936, 70 percent of the importations from both Canada and Mexico came in during the months of March, April, May, and June, which resulted in a severe depression of the northwestern markets, including St. Paul.

Of course, it is my contention, in view of the plight that the cattlemen of the Northwest are in, that importations of cattle weighing 700 pounds or more should be reduced at least 50 percent. In connection with the treaties with the South American countries, it is my belief that no beef, canned, frozen, or otherwise treated, should be permitted to come into the country until such time as the cattlemen are placed in a financial condition so that they can liquidate at least part of their debts and pay their back taxes.

The position which I am taking with reference to the quota is one taken by the American National Livestock Association, as disclosed by a copy of a memorandum supporting this request prepared by the said association, which I am asking leave to make a part of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

(Memorandum from American National Livestock Association, 515 Cooper Building, Denver, Colo., supporting request that monthly quota should be established to govern the importations of cattle under the Canadian reciprocal trade agreement)

I call your attention to the fact that in the 4 months, March to June, inclusive, 95,669 cattle, weighing more than 700 pounds each, came from Canada alone. During the same period 13,739 cattle of this class came from Mexico. The combined total for this period was 109,408 head, or 70.2 percent of the entire yearly quota for this class of 155,799 head.

Cattle and calves—Monthly average price per 100 pounds, Chicago, 1936, based on the mean of daily range of quotations

[Slaughter beef steers 900–1,100 pounds]

Month	Choice	Good	Medium
January	$12.50	$10.65	$8.23

May	8.91	8.17	7.39
June	8.62	7.84	7.24
July	8.84	8.17	7.39

I set forth below the average prices received by farmers at local markets, as reported by the Crop Reporting Board of the United States Department of Agriculture, for the 15th day of each month:

1936:	Per 100 pounds
January	$6.22
February	6.19
March	6.12
April	6.27
May	6.00
June	5.99
July	5.77

Month	Prices paid by farmers for commodities (1910–14 =100)	Parity price (ratio 1936 price to prices paid by farmers)
January	122	6.15
February	122	6.23
March	121	6.40
April	121	6.66
May	121	6.66
June	120	6.53
July	123	6.56

I call your attention to the fact that the only month in the 7-month period which I have included, when farmers receive parity prices for their cattle, was the month of January, just when the reciprocal trade agreement went into effect, and that the subsequent decline in price with practically no change in prices paid by farmers soon put prices again out of line.

CONDITION ON ST. PAUL MARKET

The following excerpts are taken from official Government reports of the St. Paul market, which, I believe, received more Canadian cattle than any other market:

"Monday, April 6, 1936.—Receipts Canadian cattle about 80 cars, some of these being holdovers from late last week. Trade at a standstill during much of the forenoon, despite decrease in supplies around the midwestern market circle.

"Monday, April 13, 1936.—Canadian receipts some 55 cars, part of these holdovers from Saturday. Market mostly steady on medium grade fed steers; 10 to 15 cents lower on better grades. Many loads still in first hands as afternoon opened.

"Monday, April 20, 1936.—Canadians, about 125 cars on hand, part of these being holdovers. The only question about lower prices was apparently a matter of degree or extent, * * * the greater share of steers and yearlings still unsold about noon. Limited selling was at 25- to 50-cent lower levels.

"Monday, April 27, 1936.—Canadians, about 110 loads, mostly steers, with some she stock. Slaughter steer and yearling trade was slow, but most sales worked out about steady. Undertone weak on the part of big killers, especially for the bulk of medium grade Canadian steers.

"Monday, May 4, 1936.—Canadians, about 90 cars. Most native cattle opened fully steady. Several loads of Canadian steers and a few heifers from the north also moved before noon on a mostly steady basis, but trading was inclined to be slow, with occasional transactions and frequent bids weak to 15 cents or more lower * * *.

"Monday, May 11, 1936.—Canadians, about 60 cars, some of these being holdovers. Buyers were practically without interest in fresh purchases except at material * * * reductions * * *. Bids were frequently as much as 50 cents off on the rank and file of steers and yearlings and the majority still in first hands when the afternoon began.

"Monday, May 25, 1936.—Canadians, about 60 loads, mostly steers of medium quality and finish. Weightier steers, particularly lower quality offerings, were harder to move and many were still unsold around the noon hour, Canadians included, resisting weak to lower bids.

"Monday, June 1, 1936.—Canadians, 78 loads. With supplies running largely to slaughter steers, that part of the trade was very draggy. Limited sales occurred around 25 cents lower * * * and weightier beeves received bids up to about 40 cents off, and the majority of offerings still unsold around 1 p. m.

"Monday, June 15, 1936. Canadians, 75 cars, largely weightier steers. Weights around 1,000 pounds down developed about steady prices, while heavier kinds remained draggy and weak, with bids frequently lower and many still in first hands when the afternoon began."

Anyone familiar with central-market practice knows that a slow, draggy market at any one point exercises a similar effect, although perhaps to a less marked degree, at all other points. It is clearly evident that the large receipts of Canadians at St. Paul kept that market in a draggy condition throughout the period of heavy shipment, and this condition was reported several times each day to all the other central markets.

While a great many of the Canadian cattle entered this country billed as "feeder cattle", this was simply for the purpose of receiving inspection from our Bureau of Animal Industry officials, which would make it possible for them to be reshipped to the country if opportunity offered. As a matter of fact, a large percentage of the cattle received at St. Paul actually went direct to the killers and relatively few went back to the country.

With a concentration of these receipts in one market over a comparatively short period of time, there can be no doubt that the imports of Canadian cattle exercised an influence on market prices throughout the entire country during that period of time out of all proportion to the actual numbers involved.

SITUATION IN NORTHWESTERN MARKETS

The influence of the Canadian cattle on the northwestern-market situation was even more marked than in central-market territory. In that country it is the common practice to ship the bulk of slaughter livestock direct to packing houses. A relatively small percentage is sold on the old markets of Spokane and Portland, which are the two major markets in that section; but the prices paid on these markets are advertised for the purpose of influencing, so far as possible, the price paid on direct shipments. It was therefore a comparatively easy matter for the packers themselves to buy cattle in Canada, ship them on to these small markets, and dominate the price situation thereon. More bitter complaint has come from this territory as to the effect Canadian imports have had on local prices than from any other section of the United States. Whatever practical difficulties may stand in the way of working out monthly quotas, a sincere effort should be made to overcome them in the interest of fair play and stable markets for the protection of both American and Canadian cattle producers.

Respectfully submitted.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, are we on this side going to have a chance to fully express ourselves?

The CHAIRMAN. The Members on that side have had that opportunity.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. But what is going to be the policy from now on?

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to include in the RECORD copy of a letter written by the American National Livestock Association, dated February 8, 1937.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Montana that his request should be made in the House, because it is a request which should properly be made in the House and not in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I intend to support the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, but first I want to take this opportunity to accept a challenge hurled at Republican Members by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON] in the course of his lengthy speech on the floor a few minutes ago.

The gentleman from Kentucky challenged Republicans to name an industry that had been injured by a reciprocal trade agreement. He made this challenge very vehemently. He made it not once but three times. Finally, I arose and asked him to yield for the purpose of accepting his challenge naming an industry which had been injured by a foreign-trade agreement. Then the gentleman from Kentucky said that when he made the statement he was not looking at the gentleman from Oregon but that he was looking at some of the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee who were supposed to know something about tariffs.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether the gentleman from Kentucky meant to be rude or whether he was just excited. But the fact remains he did not allow anyone to accept his challenge, and certainly he did not allow me to do so.

I wish to accept that challenge now. If the gentleman from Kentucky will look into the printed record of his own hearings before the Ways and Means Commitee on the pending bill he will find that I inserted there a very exhaustive and learned statement by Mr. C. C. Crowe, editor of the Pacific Coast Lumber Digest. Mr. Crowe is recognized as one of the leading authorities on the subject of lumber. If he will read that statement he will learn in detail how the Canadian trade agreement has injured our lumber industry.

We have been so injured in Oregon in the lumber industry by the reciprocal-trade agreement with Canada that it has almost entirely disrupted both the local and the foreign market. In my own State, which is probably the largest producer of lumber in the United States, 6 percent of all the lumber sold right in my own community is imported from Canada; and that Canadian lumber is made under conditions and upon a scale of wages such as would not be tolerated in America—a wage upon which no American lumber worker could live. I commend the article to the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky. If he will read it, he will find that the Canadian agreement has effectively stopped the recovery of an industry which would otherwise now be prosperous.

The gentleman from Kentucky proceeded for 45 minutes with a general discussion of the tariff. I do not want to appear rude, as it seemed to me the gentleman appeared, but I do want to say that in my humble opinion there have never been heard so many loose or inaccurate statements made about existing and previous tariff laws as were made during this 45 minutes by the gentleman from Kentucky. He said, among other things, or at least I so understood him, that there was no essential difference between the flexible provisions of the 1930 Tariff Act and the provisions of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act of 1934 so far as delegation of power to the President is concerned; that both delegated an equal amount and a similar character of power to the President; and that Republican tariff acts had established the precedent in this regard.

Anyone who knows anything about the tariff law of 1930, or any other Republican tariff law, knows that this is not the case. In the Tariff Act of 1930, under the flexible provision of that act, the Tariff Commission was given the right and the authority, upon certain conditions, to make an examination into tariffs and tariff schedules and ascertain whether those tariffs carried out the policy of the Congress of the United States. If the Commission, as a fact-finding body before which any interested party had the right to appear, found upon examination that a particular tariff was not high enough to offset the difference between the cost of production of an article here and abroad, and if the Commission so certified to the President, then the President, under that flexible provision, was authorized to readjust that particular tariff so that it would equal the difference in cost of production. That was the flexible provision of the 1930 Tariff Act, and that is all it was. There is no similarity whatever between that and the blanket discretionary tariff-making power given the President under the Reciprocal Trade Agreement Act, and the gentleman from Kentucky certainly ought to know it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I oppose the pending resolution, House Joint Resolution 96, extending the life of the so-called Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act of 1934, for the same reasons that I opposed the original act in the Seventy-third Congress.

This act has now been in operation nearly 3 years. All of the original objections made to it when it was first before the Congress and all of the predictions made then in regard to it have been amply sustained and confirmed by the actual operation of the law. A number of treaties or trade agreements have been made with foreign countries under the blanket authority given the President by this act. Each of these trade agreements has reduced existing tariff rates on agricultural products, to the detriment of American agriculture, by giving foreign producers a part of the American market. That is what every opponent of the act in Congress expected and predicted, because that was the plain and obvious purpose of the act from the beginning. This harm to the American producer, in my opinion, must necessarily increase in the future in direct proportion to the number of tariff-reducing trade agreements that are made and the number of additional farm products that are involved in those agreements. Based upon our 3 years' experience under the act, it is not logically possible to draw any other conclusion.

Before discussing this act in any detail we may as well start with the assumption that it is now permanent and not emergency legislation, and that the present extension of the original act for 3 years is but the first of a series of extensions which will make the act permanent. This administration definitely intends it to be permanent.

When the original 1934 act, with its life limited to 3 years, was introduced "as a means", to quote the language of the act, "of assisting in the present emergency in restoring the American standards of living", I ventured to predict then that it was not an emergency measure at all, and that the so-called experts in the executive department who initiated this legislation, and who submitted it ready drafted to the Congress without bothering to consult the legislative branch of the Government on it, had no intention whatever of offering it merely as an emergency measure. Their gesture in this regard was, in my opinion, a subterfuge. I said then, and I repeat now, that the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act, the life of which the President has now ordered the majority in Congress to extend, was to be the permanent tariff policy of this administration. The Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act was, as it still is, nothing more or less than the vehicle which the Chief Executive selected as the means of permanently reducing the tariff upon American products without the consent and, if he so desired, without even the knowledge of either the Congress or the people.

That very thing has repeatedly and consistently been done in every trade agreement with a foreign country that has been made to date under the act. No emergency is or ever was involved in it. The pending bill purports again to extend the life of an emergency measure for another 3 years. The provision for this limited term, I am convinced, is the merest camouflage. The proposed extension may as well be without limit, for there is no indication whatever that the administration ever intends to abandon this policy as long as it retains its majority in Congress.

My objection to the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act is based upon three propositions, each of which seems to me to be fundamental.

First. In my opinion, the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act directly violates not only the spirit but the plain letter of the Constitution, because under it the Congress has transferred its entire effective tariff-making power to the President. The President now, under the blanket authority given him in this measure, actually makes tariff law himself by prescribing in the trade agreements made pursuant to the act what specific tariff duties are to be imposed upon each and all imported articles covered in the trade agreements. The Congress has nothing whatever to do with it. The constitutional question involved here seems to me to be so plain that it is hardly a subject of serious controversy.

The Constitution declares, of course, that Congress shall have the power to lay duties, imposts, and excises, and it imposes upon the Congress the exclusive duty and responsibility in that field of government. The Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act, ignoring this plain provision of the Constitution, declares that the President shall have this power. Since there is no provision in the act requiring ratification by the Senate of any tariff made by the President in negotiating a foreign-trade agreement, and since the act gives the President full authority in that regard without the necessity of consulting Congress at any stage of the proceeding, it is plain that there is absolutely nothing left for the Congress to do in the way of actually making a tariff rate. This power has passed to the President and the President has continuously used it to the total exclusion of the Congress. Since the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act was passed in June 1934, the Congress has enacted no tariff law whatever. The Ways and Means Committee of the House, which is supposed to have original jurisdiction in this field, has never since that time reported a tariff law nor even considered one. Furthermore, there is no indication at the present that the Ways and Means Committee will ever again consider or report tariff legislation to the House so long as the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act remains in force. Under the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act the surrender of this purely legislative function and privilege from the Congress to the President has been 100 percent complete and 100 percent effective.

The question has often been asked why, then, if the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act is unconstitutional, the question has not been taken to the Supreme Court and the act invalidated. The reason is, of course—and this is the opinion, I believe, of all lawyers who have gone exhaustively into this subject—that under this particular act the constitutional question cannot be raised by a defendant in a court having jurisdiction to determine it. It is one of those rare and peculiar cases where a defendant, no matter how greatly he is injured by an illegal act, cannot show what in law is called legal damages. Under this act, therefore, the President can negotiate a treaty reducing the tariff protection upon a domestic commodity to such an extent that the foreign producer could take the entire domestic market and drive the American producer completely out of business. There is no way under existing law, however, by which an American citizen so injured by an act of this kind may raise in court the question of the constitutionality of the act by which he was injured.

The Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act, in my opinion, was deliberately drafted by its sponsors with this in mind. All of the evidence, internal and external, points directly to the conclusion that they deliberately intended from the beginning to evolve and administer a tariff policy the constitutional validity of which could not under our law be inquired into by any citizen adversely affected by it.

Second. I oppose the act in the second place because under it the trade agreements, and, consequently the tariff rates prescribed in them, are made in an utterly autocratic, arbitrary, and dictatorial manner, without the consent, and often without the knowledge, of citizens of the United States who are most directly and vitally concerned in those tariffs. These citizens, under the act, not only have nothing to do with the selection of those who make the tariff-reducing agreements with foreign nations, but the citizens affected do not even have the right to appear before the tariff makers and present their cases, either personally or through their Representatives in Congress.

As a matter of fact the names of the men who actually decide upon and fix tariff rates on commodities covered in a trade agreement have never even been published. Neither the people themselves nor their Representatives in Congress know who these men are. To date the State Department has persistently refused to disclose the identity of this group of men, which is known as the Committee for Foreign Trade Agreements, and in whom the entire effective tariff-making power, which formerly belonged to the people, is now vested. The reason given for this secrecy is that if the personnel of the Committee for Foreign Trade Agreements were known the interested public would be inclined too much to try to contact them and petition them directly for redress of grievances, and thus interfere with their work. This secrecy as a matter of fact is, of course, unnecessary, so far as protecting the tariff makers from a trouble-making public is concerned, because neither under the Trade Agreements Act itself nor under the regulations made pursuant to it, are the people given any right whatever to present their cases to this committee or to otherwise approach or contact it. As an example of autocratic, unlimited, and uncontrolled power, you may search in vain amongst any of the dictatorships of Europe to find the counterpart of the Committee for Foreign Trade Agreements.

Third. My objection to the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act is that its sole effective purpose consistently has been, and still is, to reduce tariff rates, so as to give a part of the American market to foreign products of which there is either already an overproduction in the United States, or, in production of which it is impossible for Americans to compete with foreigners. No one I think will contend that the present tariff on any agricultural product is too high. Even the President in his 1932 campaign declared that he did not know of any agricultural tariff which ought to be reduced. On the other hand, most people, regardless of their party affiliation, are of the opinion that the tariffs on many agricultural products are too low and that they ought to be increased. Notwithstanding this, I call attention of the House to the pertinent fact that in all of the trade agreements with foreign nations made to date under the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act not a single tariff on any agricultural product has been increased. Where there has been a change in rates that change has always been made by lowering the rate. Tariffs under these agreements have been lowered on agricultural products which admittedly did not have enough protection. The reason for this is simply that it is the policy of the present administration to reduce tariffs, regardless of what the Congress or the country may desire in this regard and regardless of the need of a product for tariff protection. The Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act has given the administration complete discretionary power to prosecute this policy and it is simply making complete use of that power. The policy will continue as long as the act is in effect. This policy is a direct reversal of the American system of tariff protection which has long been accepted by the people of the United States, entirely without regard to what political party they belonged to. So fundamentally right has been that American policy that it has never been been changed nor interfered with even by Democratic administrations, when they have been in power, from the time of the Civil War down to the very date of enactment and approval of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act on June 12, 1934.

And this brings me to another and a very peculiar phase of the question. The tariff policy of the present administration is not the tariff policy of the people of the United States nor of their Representatives in Congress. It is not even the tariff policy of most of the individual members of the majority party in the national lawmaking body. If anyone doubts this let him ask any majority Member of Congress who has ever appeared before the Committee on Reciprocity Information in a futile endeavor to retain the existing tariff protection on an agriculture commodity produced in his own

State. I say in all sincerity that it is not even a Democratic Party policy. It is a policy evolved and created by the executive department alone. It was determined upon by the Executive without even consulting the Democratic majority in Congress and without disclosing to the majority what the executive department intended to do in the way of reducing tariffs. It came into existence through a blanket grant of legislative authority given to the President by his majority in Congress in response to his demand for discretionary lawmaking power in an alleged emergency. It has always been my opinion that most members of the majority party did not at the time realize the nature and extent of the lawmaking power which they transferred to the President through the passage of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act. Certain it is that most of them did not know the length to which this power would be carried by the President. This fact is abundantly revealed in the speeches of majority Members when the original bill was under debate in the House. They should know now, however, after 3 years of experience under this act that the tariff-making power which the Constitution reposes solely and exclusively in the people's representatives in Congress has, through the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act, been more completely removed from the people than any power that has ever been assumed or exercised by this Government. And knowing that, I think they should now be willing to repeal the act and to recapture the legislative jurisdiction in the field of tariff-making which they have surrendered.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I read from the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee with reference to the attitude of the National Lumber Manufacturers Association in respect of whether they favor or oppose the extension of the present Foreign Trade Agreements Act. On page 354, in a communication addressed to the Committee on Ways and Means, Mr. Wilson Compton, who apparently is speaking for the National Lumber Manufacturers Association, starts off in this wise——

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. In just a moment. Let us not get sidetracked. Let us take the printed word. Here is what he says:

> The lumber industry favors the continuance of the reciprocal-trade agreements.

Mr. MOTT. Now will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky (reading):

> Action to that effect by resolution was taken by the governing board of the National Lumber Manufacturers Association representing the entire organized lumber manufacturing industry. The position of this industry was stated in a letter addressed to the Secretary of State on December 14, 1935, following the announcement of the terms of the trade agreement with Canada.

Then they set forth the letter referred to, and it is fair to say that in the statement they say they have not received everything they wanted, but he says here:

> The terms of that agreement affecting lumber were harsh, but it is recognized that under the reciprocal plan there must be both give and take.

They say there has been more give than take, but the lumber industry expects "if the program is carried to its logical conclusion of trade agreements with all important trading nations, a more even balance will be arrived at."

I now yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MOTT. As everybody knows, the National Lumbermen's Association did make that statement. Why they made it nobody in my part of the country seems to know, but the fact is that that statement of the head of the National Lumbermen's Association has been repudiated and denounced by practically every manufacturer of lumber and producer of lumber in the Pacific Northwest.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The gentleman is an able Member of this body. Why did he not present that repudiation to the Ways and Means Committee?

Mr. MOTT. I did.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Certainly the gentleman would not be derelict in his duty.

Mr. MOTT. If the gentleman will yield, I did, and that is covered in the statement of Mr. CROWE, which I mentioned in my remarks a few minutes ago.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Let me ask the gentleman this question: Has the National Lumber Manufacturers Association ever repudiated this statement?

Mr. MOTT. No; not the organization controlling the National Lumbermen's Association, and that is just about as representative of the opinion of those engaged in the lumber business, I will say to the gentleman, as the declarations of some of the chambers of commerce in the various communities of the United States reflect the opinion of the people in their own communities.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I just wanted to read the printed word.

Mr. MOTT. And I refer the Members to the article I referred to a moment ago, which will be in the RECORD.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I rise in favor of the amendment. I want Members to realize that I have in common with you the highest respect for the Secretary of State.

Soon after this law went into effect I went to the Secretary of State and pleaded with him to have a full, complete, and open hearing upon every agreement. I asked him at that time to give newspapers notice of the proposed hearings, that every commodity likely to be taken up should be specified when these announcements were made, that manufacturers, farmers, and labor be notified also of these proposed agreements.

He was very courteous and agreed to one part of it, and that was the public announcement to the press, but he did not make the announcement of the commodity affected.

I have felt that the manufacturers and the employees in industry—and when I say industry I mean agriculture as well—should have a voice in the hearing.

I am sent here, you are sent here, to represent your people and to fight with every drop of blood in your body for their interest.

I know my people do not want me to throw away lightly any power that I may have to protect them. I believe in accepting this amendment, the only thing that will insure a complete and full hearing.

I feel very seriously about this. I cannot bear to have my power to help my people taken away, and, frankly, I do not like the letters that have been coming in lately in regard to the courage of Members of the House of Representatives.

I know you, I know your ability. I know your worth. You have more chance to study the needs of your district than has the President of the United States or the Secretary of State. You are the direct representatives of your constituents. I do not believe that in your hearts you want the President to reorganize you. He is reorganizing the executive department; he is trying to reorganize the judiciary; and next he will try to reorganize the Congress, not by indirection but by direction.

There is a very definite and decided feeling not only among our citizens but all over the world that the powers of Congress are being delegated. It is true. At first they slipped away gradually, little by little; but now they are going very fast. Those powers must not be delegated. They are ours by constitutional right and must be guarded jealously. Once lost, they will be most difficult to regain.

I beg of you to consider favorably this amendment in order that your people may be given a chance to have their day in court and to be heard.

Again I repeat that no one can doubt the motives of our Secretary of State, but he should take us and the people of the country into his confidence. He should have confidence in us and we in ourselves. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON] a moment ago was kind enough to yield to me when he had the floor, but his time expired before I had opportunity to make the observation I desired to make at that time. We were then talking about lumber, and there seemed to be some difference between the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON] and the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT] as to what the attitude of the lumber interests in this country was on the matter of the tariff on lumber. I thought it might be some contribution to that discussion to call the attention of the Members to the fact that a few years ago, when the Committee on Ways and Means was considering an excise tax on imported lumber, I received from a prominent lumberman in my district a lengthy letter in which he explained very fully and convincingly his views to the effect that there should be an excise tax on imported lumber. I immediately replied to him telling him that I was pleased to receive his communication and that I believed his arguments were sound, and I stated that I would support that tax on lumber.

That was in effect a tariff on lumber, although called an excise tax in our revenue bill. This position was compatible with my views, because I have always believed in protecting American industry. A few weeks later, however, just before the bill came up in the House for consideration, I received a telegram from the same gentleman in which he urged me to vote against an excise tax on lumber. I wrote to him and stated that his first argument in his letter was so convincing that he convinced me that I should vote for a tax on lumber and even though he had changed his mind in that respect, I had not. I endeavored to find out what caused him to change his mind and I have not been entirely sure up to this time, but I have learned that in addition to his owning large lumber interests in this country he owned very extensive lumber interests in Canada. Whether rightfully or wrongfully I concluded that after writing his letter to me he finally determined that his lumber interests in Canada were more valuable to him than his lumber interests in the United States, and he thought it to his advantage to change his position. And I agree with the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT] that men in the lumber industry are not unanimous in their position in regard to this question. It has been my observation, though not the result of any thorough investigation, but merely from general discussion with these men in the lumber business, that the lumberman's position is very often dependent on whether his lumber interests are more extensive here than they are in Canada. I call attention to the fact that many of the large American lumber interests also own extensive lumber interests in Canada. It is a purely selfish proposition with many of our so-called American lumbermen, and as far as I am concerned my vote goes with the lumbermen who are interested in American rather than Canadian timber holdings. [Applause.]

Mr. HILL of Washington. Mr. Chairman, "the proof of the pudding is in the eating thereof." The question is, Have these reciprocal agreements worked for the benefit of the American people or not? I do not believe it is denied, even by the opposition here, that they have benefited the American people. I would not have injected my voice in this debate, except for the fact that two gentlemen have risen here and spoken about the Canadian situation. Just very briefly may I say that in my district there are two sections that produce early soft fruits and early vegetables. Prior to the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill we were shipping into Canada thousands of carloads of vegetables and soft fruits. It was the livelihood of the people of the sections of Walla Walla and Yakima as far as soft fruits and vegetables are concerned. When the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill was passed in 1930, almost immediately—we will say within 3 weeks—the Canadian Government, because it had the power and because of the way they do things now modernly, put a tariff on about 135 of the exports from this country into Canada. The result of that was to destroy entirely our trade with Canada, and those farmers in the Yakima Valley and in the Walla Walla country, who had been Republicans all of their lives, turned on that one issue alone to vote for the man who sits in the White House now. They have continued to do that for the last two elections, and now under these reciprocal-trade agreements our exports into Canada are picking up and growing. We expect them to be not only the same as they were prior to 1932, but to increase.

May I also say to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT] that I do not think he represents all of the lumber districts of the great Northwest. It is my opinion that the lumbermen of Washington on the coast—I may be wrong and, if so, I shall ask some one from Washington to correct me, not from Oregon—are well satisfied, just as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON] said, and that although they did not get all they wanted, they are well satisfied with the reciprocal-trade agreements and are willing to stand back of them. There are three things that come from these reciprocal agreements. In the first place it seems to me that we must recognize the fact that we have to deal with foreign countries, and if we want to deal with foreign countries we must have not only exports, but also imports.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL of Washington. Not now, I have only 5 minutes. The second thing is that we must consider all sections of our country and not just one section. It is true that I stand for the reciprocal-trade agreements because they have helped my section of the country, but I consider that point of view too narrow. I am not only representing my people in the Fourth District of Washington, but I feel that as a Member of the National Congress I am representing the people of the whole United States. Why? Because what is good for the whole United States must be good for the Fourth District of Washington. So let us look at these things from a broad standpoint, from a national standpoint. The gentlemen on the Republican side want to go to the Grundy way of doing it. We want to do it the way they are doing it in other countries. You all know the old game of poker. When you sit down to that game you have to play it the way the others sitting in play it. If you do not you are left out. Now, we have to play the game of international trade as the majority of our partners play it. They leave the making of agreements in the hands of their executive departments, and can and do negotiate these agreements in a few weeks' time. Unless we place this in the hands of our executive department we are left out in the cold entirely. I may say to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] that as far as I am concerned I will rather be guided in this matter by the President of the United States, who stands for all the classes in the country—farmers, laborers, and manufacturers—rather than Mr. Grundy, who represents the manufacturers only.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

The pro-forma amendments were withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. REED of New York) there were—ayes 69, noes 147.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TREADWAY: In line 8, before the period, insert a colon and add the following: "Provided, That after the enactment of this resolution no proclamation shall be made reducing the duty on articles the growth, produce, or manufacture of any foreign country below the amount necessary to equalize the difference in cost of production, as defined in section 336 of the Tariff Act of 1930, of such articles and like or similar domestic articles if produced in the United States in commercial quantities."

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, the amendment is very plain. It is simply intended to protect the American producer from lower rates on imported goods than will equalize foreign and domestic production costs. It provides that no proclamation shall be made wherein foreign competition is not equalized by a sufficient duty or tariff.

We have been informed by the Secretary of State that the object of this measure is to reduce "excessive" tariffs. If such is the case, there is no reason I can see why he or the supporters of this measure should object to having tariff rates which merely put the American producer on an equal footing with the foreign producer in the home market.

Of course, the whole spirit of this measure, Mr. Chairman, is in favor of foreign countries and foreign producers. That is not my logic. I have never been able to see the theory under which we, as American legislators, should legislate more favorably for foreign nations than for our home people. That question has been debated up and down the line. Perhaps there is no reason why we should continue to discuss it. I realize, of course, that any amendment offered by this side of the House in the interest of American agriculture, American labor, or American industry will be voted down by the other side because, as the gentleman from Minnesota said a few moments ago, the entire proposition is laid out for them at the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue. [Applause.] We on this side of the aisle have not taken our instructions outside of those that are sent to us by our constituents. Therefore, I feel that in offering this amendment I am doing so in the interest not only of my constituents but of all agriculture, labor, and industry in the United States. There cannot be any question but that we should have a duty sufficient to protect our own people.

This question of granting so much authority to the gentleman in the White House brings to mind an extract from the debate occurring here in March 1934, when Alexander Hamilton was quoted by one of the speakers. I read:

> The President is to have power "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur."
> However proper or safe it may be in governments where the executive magistrate is a hereditary monarch to commit to him the entire power to make treaties, it would be utterly unsafe and improper to intrust that power to an elective magistrate for 4 years' duration. * * * An ambitious man might make his own aggrandizement, by the aid of a foreign power, the price of his treachery to his constituents. The history of human conduct does not warrant that exalted opinion of human virtue which would make it wise in a nation to commit interests of so delicate and momentous a kind as those which concern its intercourse with the rest of the world to the sole disposal of a magistrate created and circumstanced as would be a President of the United States.

I think Alexander Hamilton's ideas and remarks in that momentous period of our history could well be copied by our Democratic friends today. We are continuing vast power in the hands of the President of the United States which does not belong there, but which does belong in this legislative body.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] has expired.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I think we are agreed, on both sides of the House, that on questions of tariffs and imports we should consider the cost of production in order to take care of American industry and American labor, but if we were to limit this bill to that particular purpose we would kill the effect of any emergency legislation. In fact, arriving at the cost of production in a foreign country is one of the most difficult things that has ever been presented to either the Republican or Democratic Party to ascertain. It takes much time and much money.

This is an emergency matter. We have all lost track of the fact that when our Republican brethren passed tariff laws and when they had reciprocal-trade agreements which they wanted submitted to the Senate for ratification, there were practically no tariff barriers in the foreign markets.

Now they all have them, especially do they have them against America; and they can change them, and do change them, overnight. Not only that but their method of ratification is quick. Their ratifying body consists of a cabinet or governmental agency which is in session all the time and can ratify, in an hour or two, the actions of agents and different arms of the government making reciprocal-trade agreements. Were we to try to put all these would-be safeguards around these reciprocal-trade agreements, we could not get anywhere. I do not believe those who sponsor the proposition that these treaties be ratified by the House and the Senate stop to realize that we are not in session half of the time. This is a proposition where we have got to deal the minute we can.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the Colombian Congress took from September to May to ratify our trade agreement with that country.

Mr. FULLER. I expect that is true, but it did not take us that long; and nobody doubts that we got just as good a deal as they did in the matter.

But we are in an emergency, as I stated. We have got to deal with 48 nations in the world in order to find a market for our exports. It has taken a long time and strenuous work to get 15 agreements, and we have got to keep working untiringly on agreements of this kind if we expect to continue the progress and wonderful work this commission is doing to bring prosperity back to American trade.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I yield.

Mr. COOPER. I am sure the gentleman will recall that the evidence presented to us showed that it takes from 10 months to a year to ascertain cost of production and the other things to which this amendment applies. It is a further fact that this agency now negotiating these agreements gives consideration to all obtainable evidence of that kind.

Mr. FULLER. Not only that, but we have experts, many of whom are Republicans, of long standing in these departments, men who are familiar with these matters, in the Department of State, the Tariff Commission, the Department of Agriculture, and the Department of Commerce. They are experts on this matter, and their services are used all the time for the purpose of seeing that American industry, agriculture, and labor are taken care of as far as cost of production is concerned.

Our colleagues on the other side of the aisle say they rise to speak for the American people. Why, my friends, we on this side of the House come from every nook and corner of this great Nation; and this was one of the issues in the last campaign. The gentleman at the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue received a wonderful endorsement from all the people of the United States except those in two little States. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 7 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I realize, of course, that I am like a lone voice crying in the wilderness as far as my side of the House is concerned on this proposition, except for some of the gentlemen from Florida like Mr. WILCOX, Mr. PETERSON, and Mr. GREEN.

There is only one point on which I disagree in his speech with my friend the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY]. I am going to support his amendment. I disagree with him, however, about taking orders from the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue. I have been here 14 years. When we had a Republican President the Republicans took orders from the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue. Now that we have a Democratic President, the Democrats seem to take orders from the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue. So it is 50-50 on that proposition so far as I can judge it.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman is the only man who voted against the proposition in this last vote.

Mr. CONNERY. The same thing has happened on the Republican side under Republican Presidents. This is the only thing in his speech in which I disagree with my colleague the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. HILL of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. HILL of Washington. In the case of the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill, did they not take orders from Grundy?

Mr. CONNERY. I do not know. Perhaps we are taking orders from Grundy on this side in this proposition; I do not know. I am not acquainted with Mr. Grundy. I do not know about that, but I do know that the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts does practically what I have tried to do in a bill which is now pending before the Ways and Means Committee, which places a tax on products imported into the United States, either agricultural or manufactured products, so as to equalize the difference between the total landed cost of such products with the cost of production of similar articles in the United States.

What could be more reasonable than to ask that a sufficient duty be put on an article so that by the time it is landed in New York and goes on sale in Macy's, for instance, the cost at that time is equal to the cost of production of a similar American article landed in the port of New York and offered in the same store for sale? For instance, why should we allow the imported article to come in, with all landed costs paid, at $1.50 when it costs to produce a similar American article $1.60 or $1.70, especially when wages in the United States are decent living wages, when American workmen have decent hours and when hours abroad vary from 60 to 70 on the average, and the average pay is from $9 to $11 a week, with average wages in similar industries in the United States $25 a week?

What is there unreasonable about giving to the American manufacturer, the American worker, and the American farmer an even break in the markets of the United States?

Mr. REED of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. I wish the gentleman would address his remarks to that side of the House. We are convinced over here.

Mr. CONNERY. If I thought I could convince my colleagues on this side of the House, I would direct my remarks over here. I thought I might get a little more sympathy from across the aisle.

Mr. KNUTSON. Does the gentleman believe in sowing the seed in sterile ground?

Mr. CONNERY. No. But I do not think I am on sterile ground over here. Florida and Massachusetts are going along pretty well together today. Mr. Chairman, this amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] is a real amendment. It gives the American workman, the American manufacturer, and the American farmer an even break in the markets of the United States in competition with foreigners. We are raising a great hue and cry here about decent wages and shorter hours. How can we have decent wages and shorter hours and at the same time permit Japan, for instance, to send their products into the United States? Over there they pay girls in the textile mills 4 cents a day. How under those circumstances can the American manufacturers and farmers be prosperous?

Mr. Chairman, I ask my colleagues from the South and West to think this over. I am perhaps a very poor prophet, but I expect in the next 5 years to see you come in here crying aloud for a protective tariff to protect your cotton growers and farmers. Time will tell.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, on Friday of last week a considerable discussion arose over the question of quarantines and whether or not the rules and regulations of the Department of Agriculture were infringed upon by any reciprocal-trade agreements that had been entered into. I think the gentleman from Kentucky handled that situation most excellently today; but, in view of the fact there was considerable discussion on the subject, I wrote the Secretary of Agriculture last Saturday, and I have received a reply from him.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point the reply which I received from the Secretary of Agriculture.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair suggests to the gentleman, if there is any extraneous matter in the request, the gentleman's request should be submitted to the House.

Mr. WEARIN. I intend to submit my request later to the House, Mr. Chairman. I simply desired to call attention to the subject at this point in the discussion.

FEBRUARY 8, 1937.

Hon. OTHA D. WEARIN,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. WEARIN: I have your letter of February 6, referring to certain statements that have been made in hearings before the Committee on Ways and Means and in debates on the floor of the House in connection with the proposed renewal of the Trade Agreements Act of 1934, which raise a question as to the effect of provisions in existing trade agreements on sanitary regulations administered by this Department.

The statements to which you refer apparently relate to a standard provision which is included in a number of the trade agreements negotiated to date having to do with consultation between governments as to the operation of sanitary laws and regulations. A specific example is article 10 of the trade agreement with Brazil.

Apparently this provision has been interpreted as meaning that the United States is prohibited from introducing new quarantine or sanitary measures without the consent of the foreign governments with which we have trade agreements which include this particular provision. This interpretation is not correct. The general effect of this provision is simply to formalize and make more specific a practice which has always been pursued by this Government with respect to the application of quarantine and sanitary measures. That is to say, it has always been the practice of this Department, for example, to give consideration to representations made by foreign governments through the appropriate channels with regard to the application of quarantine and sanitary measures for which it is responsible.

The article in question provides for (1) "sympathetic consideration" by each government to representations made by the other government with respect to the application of sanitary laws and regulations for the protection of human, animal, or plant life; (2) consultation between technical experts of each government upon request of one of the governments party to the agreement with respect to the operation of particular sanitary regulations; and (3) consultation between governments, "whenever practicable" before the application of any new measure of a sanitary character.

It is specifically provided that the provisions of this article do not apply to actions affecting individual shipments received in either country under sanitary measures already in effect or actions based on pure food and drug laws.

This provision was drafted in consultation with officials of this Department. We are convinced that it does not deprive the United States Government of the right to take whatever action may be necessary along the line of sanitary quarantines or embargoes on imports of agricultural products whenever there is a sound, scientific basis for such action.

The position of this Department is that the Government of the United States should have complete freedom to act with respect to prohibiting the imports of agricultural products when the scientific evidence indicates that there is a real risk of the introduction of harmful plant and animal diseases and insect pests. We believe that we have such freedom under the terms of the standard sanitary provision in the various trade agreements. This Department does not believe that sanitary import measures should be used as a substitute for economic protection. We believe that the modification of our sanitary regulations should be based on careful and continuing examination of their merits in the light of the purposes for which they were imposed. The consultation provided for in the standard sanitary provision in the trade agreements would constitute a part of such examination.

Sincerely yours,

H. A. WALLACE, Secretary.

I would also like to call the attention of the Committee to another very important matter by way of summary in this debate. We have listened to a lot of talk about what the opposition claims to be the adverse effect of reciprocal-trade agreements upon agriculture, but what are the facts? Let us take a look at the wholesale price index of farm products in 1932 under the protection afforded by the Hawley-Smoot bill and to price index of the same products in 1936 under existing trade agreements.

COMPARATIVE PRICES OF FARM PRODUCTS IN 1932 AND 1936

The following table gives representative wholesale prices of farm products in June 1932 and June 1936:

Commodity	Average price
	June 1932	June 1936
Grains:
Corn, No. 3, mixed, per bushel, Chicago	$0.304	$0.644
Oats, No. 2, white, per bushel, Chicago	.214	.307
Rye, No. 2, per bushel, Chicago	.527	.640
Wheat, No. 2 Red Winter, per bushel, Chicago	.511	.949
Wheat, No. 1 Northern Spring, per bushel, Minneapolis	.574	1.089
Livestock and poultry:
Cattle:
Calves, good to choice, vealers, per 100 pounds, Chicago	6.094	8.950
Cows, good to choice, per 100 pounds, Chicago	4.238	5.870
Steers, good to choice, per 100 pounds, Chicago	7.375	8.505
Hogs, fair to choice, light butchers, per 100 pounds, Chicago	3.931	10.355
Sheep: Ewes, native, fair to best, per 100 pounds, Chicago	1.531
Poultry, live fowls, per pound, Chicago	.129	.190
Other farm products:
Cotton, middling, per pound, New Orleans	.052	.121
Eggs, first, per dozen, fresh, Chicago	.125	.208
Hay: Alfalfa, per ton, Kansas City	9.750	11.150
Milk, fluid, per 100 pounds, Chicago	2.110	1.570
Seeds: Flax, per bushel, Minneapolis	1.031	1.740
Potatoes, white, per 100 pounds, Chicago	1.115	2.080
Wool, domestic, Ohio, grease basis, half-blood, per pound, Boston	.154	.374
Butter, cheese, and milk:
Butter, creamery, extra, per pound, Chicago	.163	.285
Cheese, whole milk, per pound, Chicago	.108	.158
Milk, condensed, per case, New York	4.750	4.850

I selected the above dates because a large number of prices of farm products were readily available in published official sources, namely, the United States Department of Labor Wholesale Prices, June 1933 and June 1936.

It will be noted that in every single instance, except one—fluid milk, which is not included in the trade agreements—the price shows a substantial gain under the present trade policy. It should be obvious to every American citizen that certainly, if you can draw any conclusions at all from figures, and agricultural prices in particular, the farm population has benefited from the Roosevelt-Hull program of reciprocal-trade agreements.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SNELL) there were—ayes 77, noes 135.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KNUTSON: Line 8, before the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That before any such foreign-trade agreement is concluded with any foreign government or instrumentality thereof reasonable notice of the intention to negotiate such agreement shall be given, and a list of the articles which will be considered in the course of such negotiation shall be published, in order that any interested person may have an opportunity publicly to present his views, either in person or in writing, directly to the agency designated by the President to conduct the actual negotiation with such foreign government or instrumentality thereof."

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, under the present law hearings on proposed trade agreements are conducted by one committee, and the agreements are made by a wholly different body. My amendment would give interested persons the opportunity to present their views directly to the body which makes the agreements. I should like to appear before the committee that makes these trade agreements and explain to them how the present method is depriving our farmers of the home market, and how anxious they are to make a reasonable profit that will enable them to carry on, liquidate their indebtedness, and at the same time enjoy American standards of living.

Under past procedure interested parties have never known what items were under consideration and therefore have had to take into consideration in preparing their case all the items of imports from the country with which we were negotiating. In connection with the proposed agreement with Ecuador the administration has modified its past procedure, but we have no assurance, Mr. Chairman, this is going to become a permanent policy in connection with the negotiation of future agreements or in the renewal of present agreements. Personally I think it would be highly desirable to write into the law a provision to protect those who are vitally affected, so that they may appear in person or by representative to protect their interests.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. KNUTSON) there were—ayes 60, noes 115.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KNUTSON: Line 8, before the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That after the enactment of this resolution no proclamation shall be made reducing the duty on articles the growth, produce, or manufacture of any foreign country below the amount necessary to protect American agriculture, labor, and industry from unfair foreign competition in the domestic market resulting from differences in American and foreign wage scales, living standards, and production costs; from subsidies paid to foreign producers by foreign governments; from the dumping of foreign products at prices less than the foreign market value; or from any other factor or factors the effect of which is to give to foreign producers an unfair competitive advantage in the domestic market over American producers."

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is in line with the suggestion made by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. WILCOX] when he appeared before the Ways and Means Committee and urged that an amendment be incorporated in the law guaranteeing the American producer that duties hereafter fixed in these trade agreements would take into consideration American production costs.

Furthermore, my amendment prohibits the dumping of surplus products onto our markets, and is an insurance to protect the American producer, whether he lives on the farm or in town, whether he toils in the factory or is in business for himself. That is the whole thing in a nutshell, and I do not see how anyone can oppose the amendment.

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON].

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute amendment offered by Mr. WILCOX: Page 1, line 8, before the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, however, That in the negotiation of any new agreement or agreements, or in the renewal or extension of any existing agreement or agreements, under the authority of this act, the tariffs or import duties upon all agricultural and horticultural products shall be maintained at a point which will at least equalize the difference in the cost of production of such products in the United States with the cost of production thereof in the country or countries dealt with, as determined by the United States Tariff Commission as of the date any such new or extended agreement becomes effective."

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON], because, in my opinion, it is a more direct approach to the subject.

The objection was made by the majority members of the Ways and Means Committee a few moments ago to amendments offered by the minority members of that committee upon the ground that the amendments were offered for the purpose of crippling or killing the legislation. I want to say to the membership of this Committee that this amendment is not offered for the purpose of crippling or interfering with or destroying this legislation. It is offered for the purpose of perfecting the bill and making it possible for some of us to vote for it. I voted for this bill in 1934. I yield to no man in this House in my loyalty to the present occupant of the White House. I will place my record of loyalty to this administration beside the record of any man in Congress, but, Mr. Chairman, I am asking that this amendment be adopted in order that I may again vote for this legislation. I want to keep my record of unqualified support of this administration intact. But I am frank to say to you that I cannot support this bill unless this amendment is adopted. I owe allegiance to the Democratic Party and to the President as the head of my party, but my first duty and my first loyalty is to the people of the Fourth Congressional District of Florida.

This amendment is necessary, not only for the protection of my people, but for the protection of American agriculture. I do not ask you to limit the jurisdiction of the President of the United States. I do not ask you to hamper the Secretary of State in the negotiation of these agreements, but I do appeal to the membership of this House to accord to the American farmer common, ordinary, everyday justice, and to preserve to the American farmer the American market. I do not ask for him any unfair or undue advantage. I do not ask for him any protective tariff which will guarantee to him a profit, either upon his investment or upon his labor, but I do ask at the hands of this Congress that you preserve the American market for the American farmer and that you guarantee to the American farmer that foreign agricultural interests shall not be permitted to dump agricultural products into the American market for less than it costs the American farmer to produce them.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILCOX. I have not the time to yield. If the gentleman will get me more time, I shall be pleased to yield.

I ask only fair and honest treatment of the American farmer. I ask that you equalize the difference in cost of production so that our competitor comes into the market on a fair and equal basis with our own farmers. That is fair. That is just, and I cannot conceive of any man in this House with agricultural interests in his district voting against it.

Of course, I, the same as you, have the selfish interest of representing the people who elected me to the Congress; not all of us can take the national viewpoint to the exclusion of our local interests as the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HILL] can do; but, after all, Mr. Chairman, there are in the southern end of the State of Florida some 350,000 American citizens who have but one voice in this House, and that is my voice, and it is my duty to represent, preserve, and, so far as it is in my power, protect their interests.

I wish to refute the statement which has been made by many of my Democratic colleagues that in the negotiation of these treaties the cost of production has always been considered. I call your attention to the treaty negotiated with the Republic of Cuba, by which the tariffs upon every product of my district were reduced to a point below the actual cost of production within my district.

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 more minutes, as I should like to give this Committee some information.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman whether he knows of any agricultural product in any part of the United States, the tariff on which was reduced by a foreign-trade agreement, where the reduction made was not below the cost of production in any part of the United States?

Mr. WILCOX. No. I am not informed on that subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILCOX. Of course, I do not know anything about any of the other agreements than the one with Cuba.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILCOX. Yes.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Where would the gentleman find a tribunal that is better qualified or better prepared to ascertain the difference in cost of production in the foreign countries and in this country and to protect the American producer than the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Commerce, and the Tariff Commission?

Mr. WILCOX. We have already the machinery set up to determine the difference in cost of production, and it has actually determined the difference in cost of production as to many of the items of agriculture in the United States. The Tariff Commission has already done this. I listened to the statements of the majority Members who say you cannot possibly determine this question. Mr. Chairman, it is just as ridiculous to say you cannot determine the cost of a bushel of potatoes or a bushel of wheat or a bushel of corn as it is to say that a shoe manufacturer cannot determine what it costs him to manufacture a pair of shoes or to say that an electric-light company cannot tell you how much it costs them to produce a kilowatt of electricity.

I also wish to call your attention to the effect that this treaty has had upon the agriculture of my district. Hundreds of previously prosperous farmers in my congressional district have been forced into bankruptcy as a result of the negotiation of the Cuban treaty, and unless relief is given within the next 2 or 3 years thousands of additional farmers of my district will have to abandon their agricultural pursuits.

The reduced tariffs under the Cuban agreement go into effect at different periods of the year. It so happens that the tariff on green peppers goes into effect each year on the 1st day of January. According to the sworn testimony before the Committee for Reciprocity Information, delivered just 3 weeks ago, the price of green peppers in the United States market in December 1936 was $1.06 a crate. The reduced tariffs went into effect on January 1, and by the 10th of January the price had dropped from $1.06 a crate to 35½ cents a crate. The price of tomatoes had dropped from $1.32 a crate to 49½ cents a crate, and the price of eggplant had dropped from 96 cents a crate to 14 cents a crate within 5 days after this agreement had gone into effect. What has happened in Florida under the Cuban treaty can and will happen in other sections under other agreements unless this amendment is adopted.

I appeal to the membership of this Committee to protect American agriculture from a repetition of this situation. [Applause.]

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say at the outset that I consider the gentleman from Florida one of the strongest advocates in this body. He is a splendid lawyer and one of the strongest men in the House

He complains about adverse conditions of this vegetable market. I believe that in his restricted area he comes nearer to making a case than anybody who appeared before the committee. But there is another side to it. The gentleman was very careful to state only his side. He does not say that the Cuban tomato has always sold at a premium in the American market; that the price of Cuban tomatoes, before the agreements, sold for 40 cents a lug premium; and after the agreements, 50 cents premium per lug.

The gentleman does not tell you that the value of vegetables in 1936 sold from the Florida market is $10,000,000 more than it was in the 1935 preagreement days.

Mr. WILCOX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I know the gentleman will say that these figures are totals and do not get down to his bailiwick. The gentleman's people have been benefited and will under the recovery program continue to get more benefit from the Canadian treaty, because it opens a market for their oranges and citrus fruits and many vegetables, including tomatoes.

Mr. WILCOX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. WILCOX. The gentleman says that I did not say that the market had increased in my district, and the reason I did not say so is because it is not the fact. [Applause.]

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I made no reference to that effect. The gentleman appeared before the committee, and the record will show that I asked him whether the acreage was substantially the same for the tomato crop, and, as I recall, he said it was substantially the same acreage.

Mr. WILCOX. I would be very much indebted to the gentleman if he would show me that statement.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I asked the gentleman about the dollar value of Florida crops. As I remember, he admitted there was increased income from Florida crops.

Mr. BUCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. BUCK. On page 517 of the hearings the gentleman from Florida [Mr. WILCOX] said, in response to some suggestion I was making at the time, the following:

Mr. WILCOX. Yes; the State Department has complained very bitterly that we increased our acreage.

Mr. WILCOX. Yes. I want to say that the State Department is mistaken, that that is not true.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The gentleman before the committee had to admit that his particular constituents had gained benefits and would continue to secure benefits under the Canadian agreement. I say again that he came nearer to making a case than any witness that appeared before the committee; but when you take Florida as a whole, increasing farm crops $10,000,000 in the agreement years, and increasing the average acreage some 733 acres, with increased production of 53,000 bushels, by lowering tariff barriers in the Canadian agreement and opening this great market, we can easily see why his people have been benefited by the trade-agreement legislation.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate upon this amendment and all amendments thereto be closed in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen of the Committee, you have heard explained the amendment proposed by my colleague from Florida [Mr. WILCOX]. He has portrayed to you very vividly the situation with reference to the vegetable-growing areas of south Florida. We are practically being forced out of a market that belongs to us. We have encouraged and fostered the raising of fresh vegetables in south Florida, realizing that it is the spring garden of the world. Many farmers on small acreage have made a living and have educated their children, and we believe that this market belongs to them and that they should not be forced out of the market by foreign production. The American farmer should have the right to raise our foodstuff.

I shall not attempt to go into the details of the figures, but I ask you roughly to pay attention to some that I can give. There is in the hearings a record of the shipments as prepared by the Florida Agricultural Association by its secretary, H. T. Bennett, and it shows that Florida has lost 14 percent in the shipment of tomatoes in a given period, while Cuba has gained 53 percent. In the shipment of peppers Florida has lost 21 percent and Cuba has gained 358 percent. In the shipment of eggplant Florida has lost 40 percent and Cuba has gained 105 percent. These comparative statements of loss and gain have been figured in the seasons of 1932–33, 1933–34, 1934–35 and 1935–36.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON] sought to convey the impression that the Cuban tomato is superior to the Florida tomato in quality. I prefer the Florida tomato myself, not only because it tastes better but because it is raised by Americans.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. I concur in that statement. Insofar as the price of tomatoes is concerned, a comparison in the markets will show that on some occasions the Cuban tomato sells for a higher price than the Florida tomato, and on other occasions the Florida tomato sells for a higher price than the Cuban.

With reference to cost of production, everyone wants to see a decent wage paid in this country. Everyone has been talking about raising the American standard of living, and that can be done only by having decent wages. So far as the cost of production is concerned in the raising of tomatoes, it figures in this way, 7.79 cents in Florida as compared with a cost of 3.14 cents in Cuba. It costs a little more than twice what it does to produce tomatoes in Cuba. That is because they use cheap labor.

In addition to that I call the attention of gentlemen roughly to some of these figures in pounds. In 1932 the export of eggplant from Cuba to the United States amounted to 3,718,974 pounds, while in 11 months of the past year it amounted to 7,528,332 pounds, more than twice as much shipped in the 11-month period as in a year prior to the agreement. Okra jumped from 248,000 pounds to 1,563,000 pounds, and in addition to that Cuban tomatoes jumped from approximately 25,000,000 pounds in 1932 to approximately 32,000,000 in the past 11 months. These are only a few; beans, lettuce, and avocados are in the same category.

With reference to the Canadian agreement I admit that we get some benefit from that, but not enough to offset the Cuban agreement, and that was only with reference to citrus fruit, and I have a protest from the citrus fruit committee in our State in which they say that while we thought we had secured benefits on canned citrus fruit juices, they find now that they have to pay a tariff on the tin that goes into the canned product, and also on the carton itself that contains the tin. Our farmers are suffering; wages in Cuba are low. Do not force them out of a market that belongs to them. This amendment will give them a fair break. I urge your support of the Wilcox amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida has expired.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. I ask unanimous consent that my time be extended for 3 minutes.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I object.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I am very happy to support this substitute amendment of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. WILCOX]. Any time that any one from Massachusetts stands up here and asks anything for New England or Massachusetts, he is immediately accused of appearing for the big manufacturers of the Nation. The people from the farm districts and from the cotton districts say that, and believe that we have no sympathy with their problems. When New England is mentioned they immediately think of big corporations, and forget the thousands of working people of our section of the country. Here is an amendment that has not anything to do with textiles or with shoes. It has not anything to do with manufactured products. It is to protect the American farmer and the citrus producer in Florida, which is a long way from Massachusetts. I am happy to support the amendment. No one can accuse me today of just taking care of New England at the expense of the cotton grower or the far-western farmer. The gentleman from Florida brought out the fact to the House that the Tariff Commission can find easily the difference between the landed cost of a foreign article and the cost of production of similar articles in the United States. We have reached that point, and yet in spite of that the State Department makes treaties and disregards the landed cost of foreign products, what it will cost to produce an article in the United States, as compared with what it costs to produce the same article abroad, including landed costs, and thus give the foreigner the advantage in the American market.

The gentleman from Florida, as I listened to his amendment, is simply trying to give the Florida fruit grower an even break in the American market with the Cuban fruit grower on tomatoes and other commodities produced in Florida coming into the United States. This is similar to the bill which I have offered, not only with reference to the farmer but the manufacturer. We were voted down on the question of taking care of the whole Nation on this matter. Now we are offered an opportunity to protect the farmers in the State of Florida. I want to assure the gentleman from Florida that I hope this amendment will pass. I shall certainly be glad to vote for it. If it is passed and it benefits Florida, as I know it will, I hope it will be an example to our colleagues on the Democratic side of the House, and perhaps they will ultimately take care of Massachusetts as they are going to take care of Florida.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. I am sure the gentleman would have been a Republican had he not been an Irishman. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONNERY. Irishman or not, I would be a Democrat.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman is one Democrat who is a consistent protectionist for every American interest, whether it is agriculture or industry. I congratulate the gentleman.

Mr. CONNERY. I want to say to the gentleman that my mother was born in Tipperary, Ireland. My father was born in Lynn, Mass., and his father and mother were born in Ireland. I am just as proud of being a Democrat as I am being an American of Irish descent, and I am intensely proud of my Irish blood. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. WILCOX. No man who knows the record of the gentleman from Massachusetts would ever accuse him of being narrow-minded or undertaking to protect New England interests at the cost of any other section.

Mr. CONNERY. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. WILCOX. I just wanted to correct one probably erroneous impression that the gentleman's argument might have left, and that is that my amendment is designed solely to protect Florida. It protects all American agriculture.

Mr. CONNERY. Yes. I inadvertently said that. It protects the American farmer in general. I am glad. One of the first meetings ever held on Capitol Hill here between the laborers and the farmers was in the Committee on Labor committee room at my request, because I know well neither worker nor farmer can be prosperous without the aid of the other. [Applause.]

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I notice on page 13 of the report it says "after consideration already given to cost data"; then it goes on further and it says, "giving such consideration would prevent the concluding of the agreement and wreck the whole plan." Can the gentleman explain that to me?

Mr. CONNERY. In other words, we know the cost of production, and we know the difference in the cost, but we will not give the benefit to the American farmer, the American worker, and the American manufacturer. That is what I have been fighting for.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. CULKIN. Did the gentleman read the radio address delivered by Matthew Woll, first vice president of the American Federation of Labor, on foreign economic trends?

Mr. CONNERY. No; I did not. It is on my desk and I intend to read it, but I know that Mr. Woll is a brilliant gentleman. He is one of the great economic experts of the country and a great champion of labor. There is a committee of the American Federation of Labor, representing 10 international unions, whose sole job it is to protect American workers under the tariff.

Mr. CULKIN. And to create jobs for American workers and buy American-made goods?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes. Protect America first and take care of the world afterward. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] has expired.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, for several years prior to 1932 I saw our foreign trade dwindle from $5,000,000,000 down to a billion and a quarter. Then came the reciprocal-trade agreements by our administration. Now, under the reciprocal-trade agreements, our foreign trade has improved about 60 percent. But if the majority party can make reciprocal-trade agreements whereby they are more operative, I believe, as a Member of Congress and a Democrat, it is my duty and your duty to do it.

Now, we have more than 30,000,000 people on the farms of our great land. You know and I know the contention in American economic life for the past three or four generations has been whether or not the farmer class of our people shall have their rights and their standard of living, as compared with employees in the industrial centers. Now, for that 30,000,000 people who live beneath the sun and the bright stars and wring their living from the breast of Mother Earth I plead. They have been neglected in our great tariff-making schemes. True, they have been helped under the reciprocal-trade agreements, but under the amendment offered by my colleague from Florida [Mr. WILCOX], their station in life, their income, will be placed upon a parity with the industrial workers of the Nation. They will receive a break in the markets of America with foreign-grown agricultural commodities. This not only applies to winter-grown vegetables in Florida; it applies to winter-grown vegetables in every part of our country. It applies to wheat, corn, and oats, and all agricultural commodities, even to your beef and mutton out in the western expanses of our great country. Why? Has not Congress the power to direct the tariff-making body and the trade-agreement body in these affairs? It has, and should exert its power.

Our growers in Florida are forced to sacrifice their markets to Cuban production, where the standard of wage is only a few cents a day. I understand that American capital is invested in vegetable production in Cuba and other nearby islands. Naturally these investors desire to see their investments protected. To maintain reciprocal-trade agreements which gives them advantage is placing property rights above human rights. Many of our Florida truck growers are producing at a loss because their market is being absorbed by foreign-produced vegetables. To continue, will force them upon relief rolls and deny them economic independence.

The wage standard and living standard in Cuba is far below the American requirement. We owe protection to our own American farmers. You cannot get our Florida farmers to produce in competition with such odds against them.

The Federal Government is making crop loans in this affected area. Many of our people are unable to pay these crop loans and are now in default because their market has been taken by Cuban importations. Do you mean to tell me that it is economy for the American Congress to appropriate $50,000,000 one week for crop loans and the next week to defeat the purpose of the loan by denying a market to the vegetables to be grown by the loans?

Mr. Chairman, it is time for those of you who represent the farm areas to awake and give our farmers protection as provided under the amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. WILCOX]. I am pleading not only for the growers of my own State but I am pleading also for the consumers of winter-grown vegetables. If Florida is forced out of production, the consumers will be at the mercy of foreign vegetable producers, and the prices paid will be extortionate.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, the facts presented by the gentlemen from Florida are, of course, very interesting and quite logical, in a way; but before we take too much of their advice, before we are too much influenced by their persuasive arguments and their personal charm, we, especially those of us who were here when the Smoot-Hawley bill was under consideration, should reflect upon the iniquity of that bill. That bill brought upon this country the worst economic paralysis, the greatest economic disaster, the most severe economic disaster of any piece of legislation ever placed upon the statute books of the United States in our generation. That piece of legislation caused other countries to erect tariff barriers, embargoes, and restrictions against the surplus commodities of the farms of the United States, factories, mills, shops, and mines. Their markets were alienated and prices of the products of mill and factory, farm and range, went way down below the cost of production, until we had almost a universal paralysis in this country. It is common knowledge that President Hoover himself referred to it as an economic pestilence, and again referred to it as an economic calamity. He described it the most perfectly of any man who has ever attempted to describe the situation.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. It would be unwise to adopt the amendment, furthermore, because unless the President in this reciprocal trade agreement policy is left with as broad discretion as possible we will not reap the full benefit of this policy. While the situation complained of in Florida is very unfortunate, nothing is perfect. Florida, moreover, has generally benefited as the result of the passage of the Reciprocal Trade Agreement Act of 3 years ago; and we are confident that in the near future the situation complained of by our distinguished colleagues from Florida, having been forcibly called to the attention of the State Department, will be adjusted to their reasonable satisfaction.

Mr. GREEN. We appreciate the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Notwithstanding the statement of the gentleman from Florida, that State, since the reciprocal trade agreement policy went into effect, has planted more acres, produced more bushels, and received more money for what she produced than she did before. This statement cannot be disputed, for it is based on facts gathered by the Tariff Commission.

So far as the cost of production argument is concerned, everyone knows that it cannot be ascertained with any degree of certainty. The Tariff Commission is working on that all the time. How can they ascertain the cost of production of Florida vegetables when they have only a 3-months season? They could not get started in 3 months. How could they ascertain cost of production abroad in 3 months? It could not be done. Cost of production varies from year to year, so that the cost of production one year would be no criterion whatever for the cost of production another year. The only purpose of these amendments is to kill the bill; that is all there is to it. We have a tribunal composed of the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Tariff Commission collecting information all the time for the purpose of comparing cost of production here and abroad. If this tribunal cannot be relied upon to furnish as accurate information as can be obtained, I do not know to what tribunal or source we can turn for aid in this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Caroline has expired. All time has expired.

By unanimous consent, the pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WILCOX) there were—ayes 67, noes 134.

So the substitute amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. KNUTSON) there were—ayes 74, noes 136.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close at 4:30.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I was not going to offer an amendment. If a member of the committee desires to offer an amendment I would not feel warranted in taking the time.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CROWTHER: Line 8, before the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That after the enactment of this resolution no proclamation shall be made reducing the duty on articles the growth, produce, or manufacture of any foreign country below the amount necessary to equalize the difference in the landed cost of such articles in the principal market or markets of the United States and the price at which like or similar domestic articles are freely offered for sale in such markets in the usual wholesale quantities."

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment. The subject matter has already been covered by amendments previously acted upon in the consideration of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York desire to be heard?

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, I have no knowledge of anything of the character of my amendment having been offered and acted upon. It may be true in general terms but not in the exact language of my amendment.

In my amendment I ask for the American landed cost, which is a much different thing from ascertaining the cost of production. This has nothing to do with difference in production costs.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, there is no substantial difference between the provisions of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER] and amendments heretofore considered. There might be a change of a word here or there, but there is no substantial difference. There is no substantive difference between this amendment and language heretofore incorporated in amendments previously offered and considered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

In the opinion of the Chair this amendment is not at all identical with amendments of a similar character which have been considered by the Committee this afternoon. There may or may not be a substantial difference, but the Chair has no manner or means of making a decision on that point at this time. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER] does not offer an identical amendment to one previously considered; therefore, in the opinion of the Chair, the amendment is in order; and the Chair overrules the point of order of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, the attempt to levy customs duties upon American landed value is not particularly new. It has been suggested during the consideration of tariff bills over a great number of years. Many of the foreign countries with which we have trade agreements use that method in assessing customs duties. For instance, there is the British landed cost and other countries which I do not think of at this moment use the same method.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROWTHER. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The gentleman's amendment has the effect of increasing the tariff rates very materially?

Mr. CROWTHER. I cannot agree to that statement because if you get a higher price base you lower the rate. That was the criticism when we adopted valuation. The Democrats said, "You are going to get more money. You are going to raise the rates." We had a table of rates arranged to lower the ad valorem and specific duties if American valuations had been accepted as the base.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. But generally speaking it has the effect of increasing the rates?

Mr. CROWTHER. Possibly, but I do not think so; not if you were to write your tariff bill with landed costs as your original premise. I do not think it would make any difference. You would come to the same conclusion as regards total duties collected.

One of the greatest difficulties, as we all know, is the ascertainment of foreign costs. It is a very difficult thing and creates many disagreeable situations. Let us suppose you were a manufacturer in this country and a couple of foreign representatives came in Monday morning and said, "We are going to stay here about a week and go over the books in your factory and find out what your production costs are."

We would probably invite them to go to a place where it is considerably warmer than it is here. We would not be very eager to consider that proposition at all. It is very difficult to ascertain foreign production costs, as I stated. It is not so hard to secure them at home here. Suppose the gentleman from Virginia were a manufacturer in this country and I am an importer. I am importing the things that he manufactures. Now, he does not care what the production cost of that production is in Germany, England, France, or anywhere else. What interests him, as a businessman or as a domestic manufacturer, is what does Crowther buy those things for landed on the dock at Baltimore, Philadelphia, or New York? That is the business problem that presents itself to him.

Mr. Chairman, to my mind, it is no concern of ours what the foreign production costs are, or their ascertainment. Let us levy the duties on the landed cost—what they cost laid down on the dock in this country. Then we may do away with this disagreeable condition which we sometimes develop with foreign countries.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROWTHER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONNERY. Furthermore, the foreigners are much smarter than we are. We take their valuation and they take whatever valuation they see fit for the best interests of their country.

Mr. CROWTHER. The gentleman is right, and even that plan does not remove all difficulty, because there is still the trickery and chicanery of shipping foreign goods here under consignment at a very low price and getting the returns after the commodities are sold in this country in the form of what we denominate as refunds.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, briefly I want to call attention to the fact that the editorial comments throughout the entire country have been very favorable on the reciprocal trade law passed 3 years ago and very favorable on the Canadian pact. For example, take, in New England, the Boston Herald, which is the great Republican organ in New England. It is a fine paper, but it is the outstanding Republican organ of New England. Its opening sentence is:

One concession by Canada is especially welcome.

Then it goes on and praises the pact generally.

The Boston Transcript, another fine, outstanding Republican paper of New England, editorially praises the reciprocal trade agreement with Canada. The Boston Traveler and various other papers throughout New England, most of them Republican editorially, praise the pact we have made with Canada. This is very significant, in view of the position that some of my Republican colleagues from New England have taken on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. LORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LORD: At the end of the joint resolution insert: "Provided, That no trade agreement affecting existing rates of duty on imports of leather, shoes, and rubber footwear shall become effective until submitted to and approved by Congress."

Mr. LORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. LORD. Mr. Chairman, my amendment is to insure the shoe industry that if there is any proposal by reciprocal trade agreements to reduce the tariff on leather and rubber footwear that the proposal will have to be submitted to the Congress and be approved by this body before the tariff becomes operative. This will afford the industry an opportunity to be heard on this most important subject, and will not be decided behind closed doors and without the knowledge of the American manufacturer and worker.

I have in my district one of the largest shoe manufacturing companies in the world, the Endicott Johnson Shoe Manufacturing Co. This company furnishes perhaps one-half of industrial employment in the district, and a reduction in the present tariff would be disastrous to this and other shoe factories, not only in my district but in the whole Nation. Therefore, it becomes very important for the industry to know that they are not to be meddled with without notice. I want to include here copy of a telegram that I received from the Endicott Johnson Co. on this measure that we have before us:

ENDICOTT, N. Y., January 21, 1935.

Hon. BERT LORD,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

* * * So there may be no misunderstanding as to our company's position in regard to existing tariff laws on importation of leather shoes and rubber footwear, we should like to have it made clear to the committee that we are opposed to any changes through reciprocal trade agreements that would permit foreign invasion in our market. Existing tariffs are no higher than they need to be to protect American wages and living standards. It is vitally important to our company, as well as all other shoe manufacturers and allied industries, also manufacturers of rubber footwear, that existing protective tariffs are not interfered with.

GEORGE F. JOHNSON.
GEORGE W. JOHNSON.
CHARLES F. JOHNSON, Jr.

The Tariff Act of 1929 saved the shoe industry from being demoralized and should not be interfered with now. The industry wants to know what is ahead of them. When one sees how the sugar-beet and cane farmers have had their crop curtailed and given to Cuba, how the vegetable farmers of the South have lost their trade that has also been given to Cuba, and how the dairy farmer has had the tariff lowered so he has to compete with the low prices of the world market, is it any wonder that the manufacturer is worried about what is in store for him?

Should this resolution pass without amendments to protect these two great industries, they will not be at ease for the next 3 years. Under the star-chamber procedure that has prevailed in the past, no one can know from day to day what may be sprung on the people overnight.

This resolution is un-American and does not so much as leave the Congress the privilege of applying a rubber stamp after the "brain trusters" have made the trade with the foreign powers.

Piecemeal we are passing this bill and another resolution giving the Chief Executive absolute power, and some day the Congress will wake up and it will be "too late", their powers are all gone.

Should the dictates of the gentleman at the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue prevail and he packs the Supreme Court, absolute dictatorship will have been accomplished and our American form of government come to an end. What then?

I hope my amendment prevails.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. REES of Kansas: Page 1, line 8, after the figures "1937", at the end of the line, insert: "Provided, That such authority shall not extend to the reduction of tariffs on livestock and dairy products."

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, members of the Committee, I wish to speak for a few minutes on the amendment that I have just offered. I believe I realize the futility of making any remarks in support of this amendment. This, in view of the attitude that the House has taken with reference to amendments that have just been considered. Right here I would like to voice my objection to the manner in which debate has been shut off, when there are still additional amendments to be offered to this bill.

I had hoped that the Members of this House would support the amendment that has just been offered by the distinguished Member from Florida, and that was so ably supported by the distinguished Member from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY]. This amendment was offered in good faith. It was offered in the interests of agriculture. This amendment was at least entitled to the support of each and every Member on the floor of this House who is interested in the agriculturists and the producers of this country. That amendment was entitled to the support of every Member on the floor of this House. You have seen fit to turn it down by a big majority. I am glad, however, that quite a number of Democrats supported it.

Since you have seen fit to reject an amendment on behalf of agriculture generally, I am offering this amendment on behalf of the livestock and dairy interests of this country. Both Democrats and Republicans have told us repeatedly that the difference in tariff reductions, under the present trade agreements, is so small that it really does not make any difference. They say that the present tariffs can work no injury insofar as the livestock and dairy producers are concerned. In view of these statements and in view of the fact that the livestock interests and the dairy interests have suffered by reason of the manner in which these agreements have been made, I felt I might gain some support from the Members from the States of Texas, New Mexico, Montana, Oklahoma, Colorado, Idaho, and other Western States, these Members who are familiar with the situation as regards the livestock interests and who are interested in their welfare.

The distinguished veteran member from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON] stated a few minutes ago that I seemed to be unduly concerned with reference to the ratification of the Argentine Sanitary Convention, which would permit the importation of dressed meat products from South American countries, temporarily declared to be free from foot-and-mouth disease. I would like to tell the gentleman from Kentucky that we should be concerned about it, when the National Grange, representing thousands of the farmers of this country, and other farm organizations, have called our attention to this very dangerous situation that is facing the livestock interests of the United States. The Grange has told us that the proposed modification of the foot-and-mouth disease quarantine, should not be allowed. The American National Live Stock Association, at its annual convention in El Paso in January, urged that the ratification of this convention be opposed. This same organization, by resolution, requested that the Reciprocal Trade Act be repealed, or that it be amended so that a two-thirds vote of the United States Senate could ratify any treaties that are made under it.

Members of the House, I would like to say to you again that we are not working for the best interests of the farmers, the stockmen, the dairy interests, and the other producers, when we allow this act to be passed, as we are doing it now, without amendment. On behalf of the livestock men, as well as the dairy interests of this country, I ask you to support this amendment.

As I have said before, this question is not political; it should not be sectional. Let us proceed to amend this bill so that it will help, and not hinder, the progress of that large group of men and women who produce the food of this country, and in turn we will promote the interests of the workingman, as well as the interests of the people generally.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CROWTHER: Line 8, before the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That so much of said section 350 as suspends the application of section 516 (b) of the Tariff Act of 1930 (relating to appeal or protest by American producers) to articles with respect to which such foreign-trade agreements have been concluded, or to provisions of such foreign-trade agreements, is hereby repealed."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the joint resolution back to the House with the recommendation that the joint resolution do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MEAD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 96) to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the joint resolution do pass.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the joint resolution to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the joint resolution?

Mr. TREADWAY. I am.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. TREADWAY moves to recommit the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 96) to the Committee on Ways and Means with instructions to that committee to report the same back to the House forthwith with the following amendment: Line 8, before the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That after the enactment of this resolution no proclamation shall be made reducing the duty on articles the growth, produce, or manufacture of any foreign country below the amount necessary to equalize the difference in cost of production, as defined in section 336 of the Tariff Act of 1930, of such articles and like or similar domestic articles if produced in the United States in commercial quantities."

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 127, nays 262, not voting 44, as follows:

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. HENNINGS, of Missouri, is unavoidably detained, and if he were present he would have voted "no" on the motion to recommit and "yea" on the passage of the resolution.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. HIGGINS, is absent on account of illness. If present, he would have voted "yea" on the passage of the resolution and "no" on the motion to recommit.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

GENERAL LEAVE TO PRINT

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have 5 legislative days within which to extend their own remarks in the RECORD upon the resolution just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, at the conclusion of the business on the Speaker's desk on Thursday, after the reading of the Journal, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 25 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that on Thursday next, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk, he be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, can the majority leader tell us what the program will be for Thursday?

Mr. RAYBURN. It is my understanding that the Committee on Banking and Currency will bring up a bill for the extension of the housing matter, and that is all that will be considered on that day.

Mr. SNELL. And the probabilities are that no appropriation bill will be brought in this week?

Mr. RAYBURN. That is true. The chairman of the Committee on Rules just informs me that there is a probability that later in the day a resolution to extend the life of the Sabath committee may come up.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. Is the gentleman talking about Thursday or Friday?

Mr. RAYBURN. Thursday.

Mr. WARREN. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the Sabath matter may come up on Thursday?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. If it does not come up on that day, can the gentleman inform me when it will be brought up?

Mr. RAYBURN. I cannot. On Friday all we have planned is to have the address on Lincoln's Birthday, and then to adjourn.

Mr. SNELL. So far as the matter of the extension of the life of the Sabath committee is concerned, I think we ought to have ample notice of when that is to come up. There will be some objection to it.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, there are two rules from the Rules Committee. We do not know when they may come up, but on Thursday it is possible that both those matters may come up for consideration. I refer to the rule bringing in the banking and currency bill and the rule for the extension of the so-called Sabath committee. If we do not call them up Thursday, then, as far as I am concerned, they would not come up until next week.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I think the House would like to know as soon as possible the definite date when the Sabath committee proposition will come up, because a great many of us on the majority side intend to oppose that resolution.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk on Thursday and following the special order just made, I may be granted 25 minutes in which to address the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include a radio address by my colleague from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks made this afternoon and to include a memorandum written by the American National Live Stock Association supporting a request that monthly quota should be established to govern importations of cattle under the Canadian reciprocal agreement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by including a letter addressed to me by the Secretary of Agriculture.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PROTECTING RIGHTS OF GOVERNMENT RESULTING FROM RAILROAD LAND GRANTS

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary be discharged from further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1530) to provide for the protection and conservation of equities or rights of the Government resulting from railroad land grants, and that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

I have conferred with the chairmen of both committees. This was reported out by the Public Lands Committee last week.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made in the Committee of the Whole this afternoon and include three letters between the Secretary of State's office and Members of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks by printing in the RECORD a letter from the chairman of the Civil Service Commission to me and a copy of a letter addressed by the chairman to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD to include an article written by Helen Essary in the Washington Times of Saturday. It is a historical description of the Congressional Cemetery. I ask this permission because I am very anxious that the membership of the House should vote an appropriation for the care of this cemetery. It is nonpolitical.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

Mr. RAYBURN. Reserving the right to object, last year those in charge tried to prevent printing in the RECORD newspaper editorials and articles by special writers in newspapers. I think we are going to have to establish that policy this year. I hope the gentlewoman from Massachusetts will not force me to object to her request, but I must object for the present.

Mr. LORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks, and to include a short telegram from one of my few industrial manufacturers on the subject on which I spoke this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made today and include certain excerpts from statutes, court decisions, letters, and tables.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend the remarks I made this afternoon by including therein excerpts from certain editorials.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I shall not object if I may have permission to extend my remarks to include the newspaper articles to which I referred.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I did not understand the request of the gentleman.

Mr. McCORMACK. My request was to extend the remarks I made this afternoon in Committee of the Whole by including excerpts from several editorials.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Massachusetts puts me in a peculiar spot. I just objected to a newspaper article requested by the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman from Massachusetts will not put the gentleman from Texas on a peculiar spot. The gentleman withdraws his request. [Laughter.]

WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the special order agreed to on January 29, 1937, the Chair appoints the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. O'NEILL] to read Washington's Farewell Address on February 22, 1937.

THE FUTURE OF THE GREAT PLAINS—REPORT OF GREAT PLAINS COMMITTEE

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress the report of the Great Plains Committee under the title "The Future of the Great Plains."

The report indicates clearly that the problem of the Great Plains is not merely one of relief of a courageous and energetic people who have been stricken by several years of drought during a period of economic depression. It is much more fundamental than that. Depression and drought have only accentuated a situation which has been long developing. The problem is one of arresting the decline of an agricultural economy not adapted to the climatic conditions because of lack of information and understanding at the time of settlement, and of readjusting that economy in the light of later experience and of scientific information now available.

The settlers of the plains brought with them agricultural practices developed in the more humid regions from which they came. By historic circumstance the period of settlement was generally one of rainfall above the average, and, although water was known to be scarce, these practices then appeared to be suitable. The long-run experience, however, has disclosed that the rainfall of the area hovers around, and for considerable periods falls below, the critical point at which it is possible to grow crops by the agricultural methods common to humid regions. A new economy must be developed which is based on the conservation and effective utilization of all the water available, especially that which falls as rain and snow; an economy which represents generally a more rational adjustment of the organization of agriculture and cropping plans and methods to natural conditions.

The whole subject of drought on the Great Plains dovetails into the studies made by the National Resources Committee in the larger aspect of public-works planning. Previous and current studies of land and water problems have been undertaken on a Nation-wide basis. In this report they have been reworked and applied by the Great Plains Committee in cooperation with other Federal agencies and with State and regional planning agencies as a component part of our desire to develop a program of constructive action for the drought area.

Whatever program is adopted must be cooperative and will require complementary lines of action by the Federal Government, State governments, and all the citizens of the region individually. Each has material interests at stake and can no longer afford to defer constructive action; each has moral responsibility for unwitting contributions to the causes of the present situation; and especially each has responsibility for undertaking lines of action essential to effectiveness of action by the others.

The problem is one that can be solved, but the solution will take time. Therefore a policy should be determined, a long-run program formulated, and execution begun without undue delay.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 10, 1937.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 4

Relative to the appointment of a commission to foster better race relations and the designation of a Better Race Relations Day

Whereas the people of the State of California are composed of practically all of the great racial groups of the human family; and

Whereas the great State of California, comprising the major portion of the Pacific coast area of the United States of America, is in the strategic position of being practically the greatest point of contact between the civilization of the Atlantic and the new and fast-growing civilization of the Pacific; and

Whereas the entire question of law and order in the State of California, and the preservation and improvement of property, social, cultural, and human values rests upon a happy, free, cooperative, mutually respectful, and sympathetic attitude on the part of the various racial groups to be found in the State of California, which attitude, if it is to resist the age-old assaults of racial prejudices, fear, and intolerance, must be founded upon truth and facts built into the personal lives and experiences of the individual citizens; and

Whereas experience has taught us that mere statutory enactments, decrees of court, or military enforcements cannot by themselves force unwilling hearts to abandon their inherited instincts of racial fears, prejudices, and aversions; and

Whereas if the people of the State of California are to achieve their great destiny of carrying the torch of civilization to new and greater heights, all racial misunderstandings and conflicts must give way to tolerance and mutual endeavor for the universal attainment of all that is best, noblest, and beautiful in human affairs; and

Whereas for more than 12 years last past the citizens of San Diego County and vicinity, through what is known as the San Diego Race Relations Society, have demonstrated the practicability and the extremely beneficial results of a program to foster better race relations in a community: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That it is recommended that the Governor appoint a commission of not more than 15 residents of the State of California, which number shall include, as far as practicable, representatives of different racial groups, to act as a permanent committee to foster better race relations, greater racial tolerance, more mutual respect, and more sympathetic cooperation between all racial groups to be found in the State of California. The members of this commission herein authorized to be appointed shall serve without compensation or any expense to the State. The commission shall render an annual written report of its activities to the Governor of this State not later than December 30 of each year; and be it further

Resolved, That it is recommended that the Governor establish by proclamation each year a certain day of that year upon which the citizens of the State of California shall be requested to turn their thoughts and activities, in public as well as private gatherings, and in their daily activities, toward the cultivation of better relations between all races, greater racial tolerance, more mutual respect, and more sympathetic cooperation between all racial groups to be found in the State of California.

Official copy of this concurrent resolution be sent by the Governor of the State of California to the President of the United States, the United States Senate, and United States House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following resolution of the Senate of the State of Texas, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Whereas the President of these United States on Friday, February 5, 1937, delivered to Congress his message, wherein he proposed that Congress pass legislation which would, in effect, grant unto the President the power to appoint immediately six additional Justices of the Supreme Court of these United States; and

Whereas we believe that such legislation would not be to the best interest of the people of Texas or of these United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of Texas, That the Senators and Representative in Congress from the State of Texas are hereby respectfully requested to lend their influence and cast their votes against the passage of such proposed legislation; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be furnished each of our United States Senators and Representatives, and that one copy be mailed to the President of the United States, the Vice President, and Speaker of the House of Representatives, as representative of our reaction to the proposed legislation.

NEUTRALITY LAW—PETITIONS

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I received a letter the other day inclosing a printed postal card in the nature of a petition which I feel I should present to the Senate. The postal card was made into a petition and therefore I am presenting it.

I should like to advise Senators that there are thousands of letters coming to the Foreign Relations Committee in response to the urge for such petitions, and it is very possible I shall have to call upon the Senate for additional quarters in which to preserve these valuable records. I think it may be necessary to ask the Senate to allow additional clerks to the committee, so that the petitions may be read to individual members of the Foreign Relations Committee. I cannot conceive that the committee will have the time to have them read in open committee meeting.

I ask that the petition to the chairman of the committee be read at the desk before I make any further suggestions.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The Vandenberg-Nye-Clark-Bone bill, Senate Joint Resolution 60, reenacts the existing neutrality law which places embargoes on arms and munitions to belligerents. In addition this bill:

1. Provides for a "cash and carry" trade policy with all belligerents.

2. Prohibits the issuance of passports to citizens traveling on belligerent ships or on any ships entering war zones.

This bill, therefore, strengthens and supports the President's proclamation on "travel and trade at your own risk."

Write at once to Senator KEY PITTMAN, chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, urging that the Foreign Relations Committee approve Senate Joint Resolution 60.

Address your letter to Hon. KEY PITTMAN, chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C. (Dear Sir or Dear Senator PITTMAN).

PUBLIC ACTION COMMITTEE,
MRS. SETH MILLIKEN, Chairman.

FEBRUARY 6, 1937.

This bill has my support.

MRS. MAURICE STEINBERG.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I do not know who constitutes the so-called Public Action Committee, but I feel that I should personally thank them for the courtesy they have indicated by telling how I should be addressed. I should prefer the intimate form of address of "Dear Senator" rather than "Dear Sir", if it will have any effect on future correspondence that may be forwarded to me. [Laughter.]

I deeply appreciate, as I know every member of the committee does, the valuable advice offered by the two or three thousand people who are writing letters in response to this urge. What I seek to do is not only to have the chairman read this advice but to have every member of the committee do likewise; otherwise the letters will have little value. For that reason I have suggested that it may be necessary for the committee to have additional clerks to read the letters to the various members of the committee and thereby save time.

Petitions of this kind are always very valuable. We all believe in the right of petition. However, I wish to call the attention of those who desire to petition that there are three other measures attempting to preserve the peace of our country, which also have been introduced in the Senate and are pending before the Committee on Foreign Relations. I think those who are so deeply interested in the subject should study all the measures and keep an open mind on the subject until they have read them all.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Is the Senator undertaking to encourage three times the number of petitions already received?

Mr. PITTMAN. No; I am simply talking now to those who have already been advised to petition.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator said he would probably ask for additional help to read the communications to the members of the committee. Does the Senator wish to convey the impression to the Senate that members of the Foreign Relations Committee cannot read? [Laughter.]

Mr. PITTMAN. No; that is not it at all. I am glad the Senator mentions that point because I certainly do not desire to reflect either on the physical or mental qualifications of the members of that committee. None of them are very elderly men and all are possessed of full physical and mental vigor. However, I think it is wise that these valuable petitions should be read not only by the chairman of the committee, but by all members of the committee, and I am seeking some advice as to how the information and advice contained in the petitions may be brought to the individual attention of the various members of the committee.

Mr. President, if there is no objection, I am going to send all these petitions to each individual member of the committee. When he is through with them I shall ask that he return them to me so I may send them to other members of the committee. That possibly may be the most economical way to handle the matter.

Mr. ROBINSON. I object! [Laughter.]

Mr. PITTMAN. I am very sorry the Senator from Arkansas objects. He is a member of the committee and, of course, has the right to object. I invite attention to the fact that if the parties who sent out these particular petitions had studied the proposed legislation pending before our committee their advice might have been more valuable. There are four different sets of suggested amendments to the present so-called neutrality law. Only one of them proposes to repeal the existing law providing for an absolute embargo upon exportations of arms, munitions, and implements of war. The other measures, which are quite similar in their attempted remedies, follow different lines or forms of procedure.

Without urging any committee on behalf of any of the measures to seek to have petitions sent to the Foreign Relations Committee, I think it will be advisable at this point to publish as a part of my remarks a complete composite print of the act as it now exists, together with the other measures which have been introduced in the Senate and are now pending before the Foreign Relations Committee relating to the subject of neutrality.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

(Showing amendments proposed to be made by S. J. Res. 51 and S. J. Res. 60 to the Neutrality Act of Aug. 31, 1935, as amended by the joint resolution of Feb. 29, 1936, and the text of S. J. Res. 47 and S. 1249. Existing law is shown in roman type. Existing law proposed to be eliminated by S. J. Res. 51 and S. J. Res. 60 is shown in black brackets. Matter proposed to be added by S. J. Res. 51 and S. J. Res. 60 is shown in italics)

Joint resolution providing for the prohibition of the export of arms, ammunition, and implements of war to belligerent countries; the prohibition of the transportation of arms, ammunition, and implements of war by vessels of the United States for the use of belligerent states; for the registration and licensing of persons engaged in the business of manufacturing, exporting, or importing arms, ammunition, or implements of war; and restricting travel by American citizens on belligerent ships during war

Resolved, etc., Whenever the President shall find that there exists a state of war between, or among, two or more foreign states, the President shall proclaim such fact, and it shall thereafter be unlawful to export arms, ammunition, or implements of war from any place in the United States, or possessions of the United States, to any port of such belligerent states, or to any neutral port for transshipment to, or for the use of, a belligerent country.

Whenever the President shall find that a state of civil war exists in a foreign state and that such armed conflict is of a magnitude or is being conducted under conditions that the export of arms, ammunition, and implements of war from the United States to said foreign state would threaten and endanger the peace of the United States, the President shall proclaim such fact, and it shall thereafter be unlawful to export arms, ammunition, or implements of war from any place in the United States, or possessions of the United States, to any port of such state or to any neutral port for transshipment to, or for use in, said state.

The President, by proclamation, shall definitely enumerate the arms, ammunition, or implements of war, the export of which is prohibited by this act.

The President shall, from time to time, by proclamation, extend such embargo upon the export of arms, ammunition, or implements of war to other states as and when they may become involved in such war.

Whoever, in violation of any of the provisions of this section, shall export, or attempt to export, or cause to be exported, arms, ammunition, or implements of war from the United States, or any of its possessions, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both, and the property, vessel, or vehicle containing the same shall be subject to the provisions of sections 1 to 8, inclusive, title 6, chapter 30, of the act approved June 15, 1917 (40 Stat. 223–225; U. S. C., title 22, secs. 238–245).

In the case of the forfeiture of any arms, ammunition, or implements of war by reason of a violation of this act, no public or private sale shall be required; but such arms, ammunition, or implements of war shall be delivered to the Secretary of War for such use or disposal thereof as shall be approved by the President of the United States.

When in the judgment of the President the conditions which have caused him to issue his proclamation have ceased to exist he shall revoke the same and the provisions hereof shall thereupon cease to apply.

Except with respect to offenses committed, or forfeitures incurred prior to [May 1, 1937, this section and all proclamations issued thereunder shall not be effective after May 1, 1937] the revocation of the proclamation or proclamations issued thereunder, said proclamations shall become ineffective after revocation.

[Except with respect to offenses committed, or forfeitures incurred prior to May 1, 1937, this section and all proclamations issued thereunder shall not be effective after May 1, 1937.]

Sec. 1–A. (a) Whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation or proclamations as provided in section 1 of this act and he shall thereafter find that the placing of restrictions on the shipment of certain articles or materials in addition to arms, ammunition, and implements of war from the United States to said belligerent described in the proclamation issued under said section 1, or to a country wherein civil war has been proclaimed to exist, is deemed necessary to promote the security and preserve the peace or neutrality of the United States or to protect the lives and commerce of nationals of the United States, he shall so proclaim and it shall thereafter be unlawful for any American vessel or airship to carry such articles or materials to any belligerent country, or any country wherein civil war exists, named in said proclamation or proclamations issued under section 1 of this act, or to any neutral country for transshipment to, or for the use of, such belligerent countries or within such country where civil war exists. It shall also be unlawful for any vessel or airship to transport any articles or materials until all title and interest therein and possession thereof shall have been transferred to some foreign government, agency, institution, association, partnership, corporation, or national.

(b) The President shall by proclamation from time to time definitely enumerate said articles and materials which it shall be unlawful for American vessels to transport.

(c) The President shall from time to time by proclamation extend such restrictions as are imposed under this section to other countries as and when they may be declared to become belligerents under proclamations issued under section 1 of this act.

(d) The President may from time to time change, modify, or revoke in whole or in part any proclamations issued by him under this section.

SEC. 1a. Whenever the President shall have issued his proclamation as provided for in section 1 of this act, it shall thereafter during the period of the war be unlawful for any person within the United States to purchase, sell, or exchange bonds, securities, or other obligations of the government of any belligerent country, or of any political subdivision thereof, or of any person acting for or on behalf of such government, issued after the date of such proclamation, or to make any loan or extend any credit to any such government or person: Provided, That if the President shall find that such action will serve to protect the commercial or other interests of the United States or its nationals, he may, in his discretion, and to such extent and under such regulation as he may prescribe, except from the operation of this section ordinary commercial credits and short-time obligations in aid of legal transactions and of a character customarily used in normal peacetime commercial transactions.

The provisions of this section shall not apply to a renewal or adjustment of such indebtedness as may exist on the date of the President's proclamation.

Whoever shall violate the provisions of this section or of any regulations issued hereunder shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $50,000 or imprisoned for not more than 5 years, or both. Should the violation be by a corporation, organization, or association, each officer or agent thereof participating in the violation may be liable to the penalty herein prescribed.

SEC. 1b. This act shall not apply to an American republic or republics engaged in war against a non-American state or states, provided the American republic is not cooperating with a non-American state or states in such war.

Sec. 1c. Whenever the President shall find as a fact that there exists in any foreign country a state of civil strife, and that the exportation of arms, ammunition, or implements of war to such foreign country during the continuance of such state of civil strife will endanger the preservation of peace between the United States and foreign countries, the President shall proclaim such facts, and it shall thereafter be unlawful to export any arms, ammunition, or implements of war, from any place in the United States to any place in such foreign country, or to any foreign country for transshipment to, or for the use of either of the opposing forces in, such foreign country. Any license for the exportation of any such arms, ammunition, or implements of war to a foreign country to which any proclamation issued under this subsection relates shall be deemed to be canceled as to all exportations to such foreign country during the period that such proclamation is in effect.

Whenever the President shall find as a fact that such state of civil strife or insurrection in any such foreign country has ceased to exist, the President shall proclaim such fact, and thereafter the proclamation issued under this section with respect to such foreign country shall cease to be in effect and the prohibitions of such subsection shall cease to apply.

Whoever, in violation of any of the provisions of this section, shall export, or attempt to export, or cause to be exported, either directly or indirectly, any such arms, ammunition, or implements of war from the United States shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

Whoever, in violation of the provisions of this section, shall take, attempt to take, or shall authorize, hire, or solicit another to take any such vessel carrying such cargo out of port or from the jurisdiction of the United States shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both; and, in addition, such vessel, her tackle, apparel, furniture, equipment, and the arms, ammunition, and implements of war on board shall be forfeited to the United States.

SEC. 4. Whenever, during any war in which the United States is neutral, the President, or any person thereunto authorized by him, shall have cause to believe that any vessel, domestic or foreign, whether requiring clearance or not, is about to carry out of a port of the United States, or its possessions, men or fuel, arms, ammunition, implements of war, or other supplies to any warship, tender, or supply ship of a foreign belligerent nation, but the evidence is not deemed sufficient to justify forbidding the departure of the vessel as provided for by section 1, title V, chapter 30, of the act approved June 15, 1917 (40 Stat. —; U. S. C., title 18, sec. 31), and if, in the President's judgment, such action will serve to maintain peace between the United States and foreign nations, or to protect the commercial interests of the United States and its citizens, or to promote the security of the United States, he shall have the power and it shall be his duty to require the owner, master, or person in command thereof, before departing from a port of the United States, or any of its possessions, for a foreign port, to give a bond to the United States, with sufficient sureties, in such amount as he shall deem proper, conditioned that the vessel will not deliver the men, or the cargo, or any part thereof, to any warship, tender, or supply ship of a belligerent nation; and, if the President, or any person thereunto authorized by him, shall find that a vessel, domestic or foreign, in a port of the United States, or one of its possessions, has previously cleared from such port during such war and delivered its cargo or any part thereof to a warship, tender, or supply ship of a belligerent nation, he may prohibit the departure of such vessel during the duration of the war.

SEC. 5. Whenever, during any war in which the United States is neutral, the President shall find that special restrictions placed on the use of the ports and territorial waters of the United States, or of its possessions, by the submarines or armed merchant vessels of a foreign nation will serve to maintain peace between the United States and foreign nations, or to protect the commercial interests of the United States and its citizens, or to promote the security of the United States, and shall make proclamation thereof, it shall thereafter be unlawful for any such submarine or any merchant vessel equipped with armament or carrying armament which may be installed on the high seas to enter a port or the territorial waters of the United States or any of its possessions, or to depart therefrom, except under such conditions and subject to such limitations as the President may prescribe: Provided, however, That any order made or action taken under authority of this section shall apply without discrimination to all belligerent nations which may be engaged in such war. When, in his judgment, the conditions which have caused him to issue his proclamation have ceased to exist, he shall revoke his proclamation and the provisions of this section shall thereupon cease to apply.

SEC. 6. Whenever, during any war in which the United States is neutral, the President shall find that the maintenance of peace between the United States and foreign nations, or the protection of the lives of citizens of the United States, or the protection of the commercial interests of the United States and its citizens, or the security of the United States requires that the American citizens should refrain from traveling as passengers on the vessels of any belligerent nation, he shall so proclaim, [and thereafter no citizen of the United States shall travel on any vessel of any belligerent nation except at his own risk, under such rules and regulations as the President shall prescribe] and thereafter it shall be unlawful for any citizen of the United States to travel on any vessel of any nation declared in the proclamation provided for in section 1 of this act to be a belligerent or to be a state wherein civil war exists; and thereafter no citizen of the United States shall travel on any vessel of any belligerent nation [except at his own risk,] and no passport issued by the Secretary of State or anyone acting under his authority shall be valid for use by any person for travel from the United States on any such vessel unless in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President shall prescribe: Provided, however, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to a citizen traveling on the vessel of a belligerent whose voyage was begun in advance of the date of the President's proclamation, and who had no opportunity to discontinue his voyage after that date: And provided further, That they shall not apply under 90 days after the date of the President's proclamation to a citizen returning from a foreign country to the United States or to any of its possessions. When, in the President's judgment, the conditions which have caused him to issue his proclamation have ceased to exist, he shall revoke his proclamation and the provisions of this section shall thereupon cease to apply.

SEC. 6–A. Whenever the President shall have issued a proclamation or proclamations as provided in section 1, it shall thereafter be unlawful for any American vessel other than vessels of war engaged in commerce with a belligerent country to be armed or to carry any armament, arms, ammunition, or implements of war except small arms and ammunitions therefor and other weapons as the President may publicly designate to be in possession of the officers of such vessels deemed by the President necessary for the preservation of discipline aboard such vessels and until said proclamation or proclamations are revoked.

SEC. 7. In every case of the violation of any of the provisions of this act where a specific penalty is not herein provided, such violator or violators, upon conviction, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

SEC. 8. If any of the provisions of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

There is hereby authorized to be appropriated from time to time, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such amounts as may be necessary to carry out the provisions and accomplish the purposes of this act.

SEC. 9. The Secretary of State shall promulgate such rules and regulations not inconsistent with the provisions of this resolution as he shall deem necessary for the administration and enforcement of the provisions of this resolution.

HOME OWNERS AND TAXPAYERS ASSOCIATION,
OF STATEN ISLAND, INC.,
Staten Island, N. Y., February 5, 1937.

Senator ROYAL S. COPELAND,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Enclosed please find a copy of a resolution which has been drawn up by the association and adopted at our last meeting of February 2, 1937.

As our representative in Washington, we hope you will give this matter your full support, as you have already shown in the past on similar matters.

Yours respectfully,

HOME OWNERS AND TAXPAYERS ASSOCIATION
OF STATEN ISLAND, INC.,
LOUIS BLITZ, Secretary.

Whereas this last depression, as well as previous depressions, have wiped out the life savings of millions who had invested their savings in banks, saving loan associations, small business, real estate, and in homes, and due to the fact of such disaster confidence became a thing of the past; and

Whereas our present administration at Washington, realizing if business had to be revived, the first move was to restore confidence by giving proper protection; and

Whereas Congress has already put into law certain Federal insurance to protect certain groups, such as through the bank insurance system, where the depositors' money is insured up to $5,000, and through the F. H. A., where they insure certain percentages of all loans and mortgages made by banks and savings and loan associations; and

Whereas this insurance already allowed to bankers and depositors would not mean much if it was not for the borrowers, for we could not have bankers and depositors if we didn't have the borrowers, and every borrower must have some equity in his business or a home in order to be able to borrow: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That if further confidence has to be restored and expect business to improve, and to be put on sound base, the same insurance and protection has to be provided for the millions who would be willing to invest in certain business, and especially in buying homes if some insurance can be given to them, their equity are not going to be jeopardized, as we have experienced in the past; and be it further

Resolved, Congress should immediately put into law in form of a Federal insurance, where the equity of a home owner or a property owner, and also a small businessman, will be protected as much as they have done for the banker and a depositor; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, Franklin D. Roosevelt; Congressman JAMES O'LEARY, Senators ROBERT WAGNER and ROYAL S. COPELAND, and our local newspaper.

I hereby certify that the above resolution was regularly presented and duly adopted at a meeting of the Home Owners and Taxpayers Association of Staten Island, Inc., held February 2, 1937.

ELOI LE BLANC, Vice President.
LOUIS BLITZ, Secretary.

THE ROCHESTER CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Rochester, N. Y., February 1, 1937.

Hon. ROYAL S. COPELAND,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: The enclosed copy of recommendation of the foreign-trade committee of the Rochester Chamber of Commerce is sent with the request that you use your best efforts to secure the increased appropriation asked for.

The recommendation has been submitted to Hon. T. S. McMILLAN, chairman, Subcommittee on Commerce Apropriations, and other members of that committee.

May we count on your assistance?

Very truly yours,

ROLAND B. WOODWARD,
Executive Vice President.

JANUARY 29, 1937.

There is no question but that statistics regarding imports and exports are of vital importance to all business engaged in foreign trade, but these data should be accurate and furnished with the minimum of delay.

In 1933, by act of Congress, the appropriation for the Division of Foreign Trade Statistics of the Department of Commerce was drastically reduced, thereby causing a considerable reduction of the personnel of this very important Division.

Since 1933 the foreign trade of the United States has very materially increased, with a consequent increased demand for statistical data.

With a greatly reduced personnel, the Statistical Division has not been able to function with accuracy or promptness. Figures submitted exporters and importers are found to be incorrect in many instances, and even when correct have been so long delayed as to be of little or no value, thereby placing our foreign trade at a decided disadvantage with foreign competitors.

In addition to the demands of exporters and importers there has been the added burden of supplying data to the State Department for the purpose of negotiating trade agreements.

The Statistical Division compiles figures on about 1,800 export classifications and 4,700 import classifications, but there is an ever-increasing demand for a more detailed classification on the part of manufacturers and others engaged in our foreign trade.

It is not the purpose of this recommendation to offer any criticism of the Statistical Division's efficiency or zeal. It has been most severely handicapped by lack of funds, with a consequent curtailment in personnel, and under such conditions could hardly be expected to supply accurately and promptly data of vital importance to our foreign-trade interests.

The Budget allowance for the Division of Foreign Statistics of the Department of Commerce is placed at $330,000, but it is our opinion that this appropriation should be sufficiently increased to meet the requirements of business, in view of the demands on the Division owing to the increased volume of business covering exports and imports.

Business should have prompt and accurate statistical information on which to base their plans of operation, and it is its right to receive this service.

The foreign-trade committee of the Rochester Chamber of Commerce submits this recommendation, speaking, as it does, for manufacturing interests in this industrial area that in 1929 exported more than $21,855,000 worth of manufactured goods to foreign countries, and data now being compiled for 1936 indicate an amount almost equal to that of 1929.

Respectfully submitted.

FOREIGN TRADE COMMITTEE, ROCHESTER, CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, GILBERT OWEN, Chairman.

Approved:

ROLAND B. WOODWARD,
Executive Vice President,
Rochester Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. COPELAND also presented a resolution adopted by the Harrison (N. Y.) Teachers Association, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HARRISON, N. Y., January 29, 1937.

Hon. ROYAL S. COPELAND,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At its January meeting of 1937 the Harrison Teachers Association adopted the following resolution:

Whereas the poor financial condition of many schools throughout the Nation has necessitated the lowering of educational standards so that many children are unable to receive a satisfactory minimum education; and

Whereas the welfare and training of all the children are matters of concern to the Nation as a whole: Be it

Resolved, That a suitable system be established whereby monetary aid from the Federal Treasury may be distributed on an impartial basis to the individual States to be used for the purposes of education. It is understood that the control of all such funds shall be vested in the State and local school district.

May we expect your support of such legislation?

Very truly yours,

HARRISON TEACHERS ASSOCIATION,
FLORENCE B. HARTH, President.

Mr. COPELAND also presented a resolution adopted by the New York Press Association, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the unemployment insurance section of the Federal Social Security Act is out of harmony with the New York State unemployment insurance law in that no tax exemption is granted in excess of $2,600 annually; and

Whereas the failure to grant such tax exemption largely nullifies and defeats the purpose of the Federal act to strengthen the State laws by giving credit on the Federal tax for State unemployment insurance payments up to 90 percent of the Federal tax:

Resolved, That the New York Press Association, realizing the situation is such that remedial Federal legislation is imperative, respectfully urges the representatives of the State of New York in the National Senate and House of Representatives to use all honorable means for the enactment of such remedial legislation; and further be it

Resolved, That the secretary of this association transmit to each United States Senator and to each Representative from the State of New York a copy of this resolution.

Mr. COPELAND also presented a resolution adopted at the annual convention held at the Transfiguration Parochial Hall, Maspeth, Long Island, N. Y., under the auspices of the New York and New Jersey Lithuanian Roman Catholic Federation of America, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

At the annual convention held on January 31, 1937, at the Transfiguration Parochial Hall, 64–25 Perry Avenue, Maspeth, Long Island, under the auspices of the New York and New Jersey Lithuanian Roman Catholic Federation of America, attended by 168 delegates from 52 organizations representing over 16,000 Lithuanian people, and realizing the intolerant conditions under which the Lithuanians live in the Vilnius territory, the following resolution was adopted:

"Whereas in the Vilnius territory of Lithuania, which was by force unlawfully occupied by the Poles on October 9, 1920, the Lithuanians are being mercilessly and relentlessly persecuted; and

"Whereas during the night on November 25, 26, 27, and 28, 1936, the Polish police made wholesale unlawful raids upon the homes of Lithuanians, frightening, embarrassing, and inconveniencing their families; and

"Whereas during the past 2 months the Polish Government authorities have closed the Lithuanian religious, educational, and cultural institutions maintained by the Society of St. Casimir, thereby causing great moral and material loss to the Lithuanians of the Vilnius territory; and

"Whereas the Polish authorities have wantonly and without just cause liquidated the Lithuanian central committee, whose object is to extend charity and provide education to needy and poor Lithuanians of the Vilnius territory; and

"Whereas radio-receiving sets are being confiscated and taken away from Lithuanian homes and Lithuanian publications suspended without just cause and their editors arrested, fined, and imprisoned without a fair trial; and

"Whereas schools and libraries have been closed and even orphanages are being interfered with by the Polish authorities, with the aid of the local police forces; and

"Whereas leaders of the Lithuanian religious, educational, and cultural institutions are being without cause arrested and prosecuted, thereby terrorizing their families and Lithuanians in general in the Vilnius territory: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That we, American citizens of Lithuanian extraction, voice our protest against the inhuman, intolerant, and oppressive acts of the Polish Government toward the Lithuanians in the Vilnius territory, and in the name of humanity and justice appeal to the Congress of the United States and the League of Nations to intercede on behalf of the persecuted people and to take such steps as may be necessary to prevent continuation of such inhuman, intolerant, and oppressive acts of said Government; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the Department of State of the United States, to the Senators of New York State in Washington, to the consul general of Poland in New York, to the League of Nations, and to the press."

Mr. COPELAND also presented a resolution adopted by the Empire State Potato Club, which was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WEBSTER, N. Y., January 20, 1937.

Senator ROYAL S. COPELAND,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR COPELAND: I am quoting below a resolution voted at the annual meeting of the Empire State Potato Club in Syracuse January 6, 7, and 8:

"Whereas the present cultivated acreage in this country is more than ample to supply all the food and forage crops that can be marketed profitably; and

"Whereas, the mineral plant-food elements in the soils of the arid and semiarid regions of the public domain constitute a valuable natural resource for future generations: Be it

"Resolved, That the Empire State Potato Club condemns all new irrigation projects and the expansion of any existing projects, and respectfully petitions all New York Congressmen and both New York Senators to work for a sharp reduction in the personnel activities and budget of the Federal Bureau of Reclamation."

The members of our organization, in common with most other farmers in this State, feel that the Government policy of attempting to limit farm production to existing needs, and at the same time bring into production new lands which are for the most part producing crops of which we already have a surplus, is inconsistent with a well-planned agricultural policy. We feel, too, that it is unsound to do this at public expense, as this is subsidizing one agricultural group at the expense of others.

We hope that in the agricultural planning of the coming year this problem will receive constructive consideration.

Very truly yours,

EMPIRE STATE POTATO CLUB,
EARL D. MERRILL, Secretary.

The Commissioner General and the Commissioner are, with the approval of the Secretary of State, authorized to make available to any governmental agency such part of the sums heretofore or hereafter appropriated for the purposes of this resolution and such resolution of April 10, 1936, as may be effectively used by such agency to aid in carrying out such purposes.

SEC. 6. At the close of the exposition or when the connection of the Government of the United States therewith ceases, the Commissioner General and the Commissioner shall return all borrowed property and exhibits to their points of origin and shall dispose of any portion of the material contributed as may be unused or any property purchased in such manner as the Secretary of State may direct in the best interests of the Government, and account therefor.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I desire to state to the Senate why I feel it my duty to ask for the present consideration of this joint resolution.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. PITTMAN. Certainly.

Mr. GLASS. From the reading of the joint resolution I observe that it undertakes to make an appropriation instead of to authorize an appropriation.

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes, Mr. President. It will be observed that the joint resolution as introduced in the Senate followed the regular form of authorizing an appropriation. Those who have a similar measure in charge in the other body are so anxious for the immediate passage of this measure that they suggested that we place in it the appropriation, with the understanding that no point of order will be made in the House, and they desire to take it up on Monday under the Suspension of the Rules Calendar.

Mr. GLASS. I will say to the Senator from Nevada that I have no objection to having the joint resolution considered, but I do not think we should establish such a precedent as would be involved by its passage. I think the joint resolution ought to go to the Appropriations Committee, which will give it immediate attention and report it. I do not think the Senate should establish a precedent of this kind.

Mr. PITTMAN. So far as I am personally concerned, I have never yet admitted that under the Constitution the House has the exclusive right to originate appropriation bills, and I do not think it has.

Mr. GLASS. I do not think it has any such constitutional right.

Mr. PITTMAN. In the Seventy-fourth Congress, however, a similar measure was passed by both branches of Congress; but the appropriation included at that time was only $50,000. Since that time there have been changes, as a result of which the Department thinks $150,000 will be essential to a dignified participation by the United States in the exposition. The committee went into this subject thoroughly in the Seventy-fourth Congress, when the act was passed providing that the United States should participate in the Paris Exposition. This joint resolution is to provide the funds to do it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I observe that the joint resolution reappropriates the unexpended balance, as well as adding $150,000. Can the Senator indicate the amount of the unexpended balance?

Mr. PITTMAN. No; I cannot. I conferred with the gentlemen who have charge of the matter, and they stated that most of that fund had been used in the preliminary work looking to the holding of the exposition.

Mr. VANDENBERG. May I ask the Senator also about the language on the first page of the joint resolution which authorizes expenditures of a very substantial nature without any limit to the authorization? Is that the usual form? Might not that provision entail expenditures far beyond the actual appropriation?

Mr. PITTMAN. The joint resolution expressly prohibits any expenditures beyond $150,000.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Very well.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will say, however, that this is the form in which the measure was passed in the Seventy-fourth Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the statement of the Senator from Nevada does not impress me with any conviction that it is necessary to consider this measure today. I am willing at any time to listen to a plea for expedition in legislation. This is an appropriation measure. I should have no objection if it were merely an authorization measure, but it makes a direct appropriation; and, therefore, under the almost universal practice of the Senate, it should go to the Appropriations Committee. In my judgment, we shall probably have a session of the Senate tomorrow or Friday.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, it is not anticipated that a session of the Senate will be held tomorrow. It is expected that a session will be held on Friday.

Mr. McNARY. Then, Mr. President, in view of that statement of the able leader, I think it is well that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. They could report it promptly, and action probably could be taken on Friday.

In view of that situation, I think I shall have to object to the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Oregon that the exposition is to begin in about 3 or 4 weeks; and if we are thinking seriously about taking part in it, we should do something as soon as possible, having accepted the invitation nearly 2 years ago.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. As I understand, the reason for seeking to dispose of the joint resolution without following the usual form of making an authorization is that if action be deferred longer it will interfere with the proper representation of the United States at the exposition.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is the case.

Mr. ROBINSON. It was first thought that perhaps the matter might not be proceeded with, but a condition arose which made it imperative to carry out the action taken at the last session, and there is a real necessity for haste.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am not impressed that 2 days will make any great difference in the representation we may have in the exposition at Paris. Let me suggest that the better way of dealing with legislation of this kind would be for the Senator from Nevada to omit from the joint resolution the portion of it which refers to an immediate appropriation and make an authorization. I should have no objection to an authorization measure. Then it could be referred to the Committee on Appropriations for final consideration.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I have already stated to the Senator from Nevada that I should immediately call a session of the Appropriations Committee to deal with the matter; and I think some consideration should be given to regularity of procedure.

Mr. PITTMAN. Under that assurance of the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, I conceive that no time will be lost in the matter; and I am, therefore, perfectly willing to withdraw my request for immediate consideration, and ask that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. McNARY. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is heard.

Mr. McNARY. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be referred immediately to the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the joint resolution is referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

COLLATERAL FOR FEDERAL RESERVE BANK NOTES

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, from the Committee on Banking and Currency I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (S. 417) to extend the period during which direct obligations of the United States may be used as collateral security for Federal Reserve notes, and I submit a report (no. 49) thereon. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill, but only because I am certain that there will be no objection to the measure itself. It was unanimously reported by the committee. I am asking that the Senate act on the bill at this time, as a favor to me, because I made an engagement to deliver an address in New York, and I should not be able to be present when consideration would be given to the bill if it were sent to the calendar.

The bill merely extends the time during which direct obligations of the United States may be used as collateral for Federal Reserve bank notes. The law making this provision was originally enacted in 1932, when there was some stringency in the money market, in order to ease that stringency. I am sure the power as given has never been abused. The authority has been extended from time to time by the Congress, and this measure provides for the further extension of the power until June 1939.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the subject matter of the measure referred to by the Senator from New York was presented to me earlier in the day by the Senator. A similar bill has been passed several times during other sessions. I have conferred with the Republican members of the Committee on Banking and Currency, which committee has jurisdiction of the matter, and they report to me that they favor the proposed legislation. In order to accommodate the Senator from New York, who desires to be away, I shall interpose no objection to the immediate consideration of the measure.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York for the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 417) to extend the period during which direct obligations of the United States may be used as collateral security for Federal Reserve notes was read, considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the second paragraph of section 16 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"Any Federal Reserve bank may make application to the local Federal Reserve agent for such amount of the Federal Reserve notes hereinbefore provided for as it may require. Such application shall be accompanied with a tender to the local Federal Reserve agent of collateral in amount equal to the sum of the Federal Reserve notes thus applied for and issued pursuant to such application. The collateral security thus offered shall be notes, drafts, bills of exchange, or acceptances acquired under the provisions of section 13 of this act, or bills of exchange endorsed by a member bank of any Federal Reserve district and purchased under the provisions of section 14 of this act, or bankers' acceptances purchased under the provisions of said section 14, or gold certificates: Provided, however, That until June 30, 1939, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System may, should it deem it in the public interest, upon the affirmative vote of not less than a majority of its members, authorize the Federal Reserve banks to offer, and the Federal Reserve agents to accept, as such collateral security, direct obligations of the United States. At the close of business on such date, or sooner should the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System so decide, such authorization shall terminate and such obligations of the United States be retired as security for Federal Reserve notes. In no event shall such collateral security be less than the amount of Federal Reserve notes applied for. The Federal Reserve agent shall each day notify the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System of all issues and withdrawals of Federal Reserve notes to and by the Federal Reserve bank to which he is accredited. The said Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System may at any time call upon a Federal Reserve bank for additional security to protect the Federal Reserve notes issued to it."

REGULATION OF SALES OF GOODS IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 936) to regulate the sales of goods in the District of Columbia.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think perhaps the report from the District Commissioners will explain the measure, and a reading of that report will obviate the necessity of analysis of each provision of the bill. I read from the report:

PROVISIONS OF THE ACT

The bill to regulate the sales of goods in the District of Columbia follows closely the uniform sales law recommended by the Commission on Uniform Sales and by the American Bar Association, with only such modifications as are necessary to adapt the bill to the District of Columbia. The Uniform Sales Act started its development in the United States at the beginning of the century and is now in force under the laws of 42 States. There is no substantial statutory law regulating sales within the District of Columbia and there is considerable confusion in the application of common law to transactions occurring in the District. The development of the metropolitan area surrounding Washington extending into Maryland and Virginia, both of which have adopted the provisions of the uniform sales law, tends toward confusion in commercial transactions to the detriment alike of the merchants and customers.

The provisions of the Uniform Sales Act have been tested by innumerable judicial constructions, the influence of which are reflected in the current draft. The bill, as reported by this committee, defines the rights of vendor, vendee, and third persons in sales and related transactions. It does not cover the field of conditional sales, which is to be treated in separate legislation.

Resolutions in support of the bill were received from the Federal Bar Association and numerous other legal organizations and from representatives of the District bar. The bill was supported by the action of the Federation of Citizens' Associations and by other civic organizations. There follows a communication from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia recommending the adoption of the bill, together with a communication from Mr. William A. Roberts, former people's counsel of the District of Columbia, favoring its adoption:

GOVERNMENT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, January 15, 1937.

Hon. WILLIAM H. KING,
Chairman, Committee on the District of Columbia,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: There is attached hereto a bill which was known as S. 3450 in the Seventy-fourth Congress, second session, which passed the Senate on February 24, 1936 (calendar day, Mar. 27, 1936), and is designed to regulate the sale of goods in the District of Columbia. The bill is the so-called Uniform Sales Act, and would regulate the sale of goods in the District of Columbia, superseding the existing law on that subject inconsistent with the provisions of the proposed act. The proposed bill follows closely the Uniform Sales Act which is now in effect in 42 States in the Union.

The Commissioners request that the act be reintroduced in the present Congress and urge its passage.

Very truly yours,

M. C. HAZEN,
President, Board of Commissioners, District of Columbia.

P. S.—The proposed draft attached hereto was submitted to the Bureau of the Budget and returned to the Commissioners with the advice that there is no objection on the part of that office to the presentation of the bill to Congress.

DECEMBER 20, 1934.

In re: Uniform Sales Act.

To the Commissioners of the District of Columbia:

There is transmitted herewith a draft of a sales act applicable to the District of Columbia and following closely the Uniform Sales Act. I prepared this draft of bill as a result of growing familiarity with gross abuse of the law of sales in the District of Columbia. I earnestly hope that the Commissioners will undertake to see that this bill is presented at this session of Congress and active effort be made to secure its adoption.

As you know, the District of Columbia has no clear law of sales. Conflicting decisions on numerous matters and the absence of statutory law covering many other types of transactions have been a decided disadvantage to our merchants and to their customers. You will note that the present amount constituting the maximum for an oral transaction under the statute of frauds is $50, whereas in the uniform act the equivalent amount is fixed at $500, in accordance with the practice in innumerable States. Obviously, the limitation inherited from the medieval statute of frauds should not be continued in this day, when oral transactions for amounts far in excess of the maximum here fixed are the regular course of business.

The legislation here proposed has been continuously approved by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws since 1906 and has now been adopted in the following States: Arizona, Connecticut, Idaho, Illinois, Iowa, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, North Dakota, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Tennessee, Utah, Vermont, Washington, Wisconsin, Wyoming, and Alaska. Our own Commission on Uniform Laws has repeatedly proposed the bill. The present study has been approved by the Federal Bar Association, which is particularly concerned with uniform State laws because of the location of its membership 'n the district attorneys' offices of the several States. I am confident that the measure will receive the high endorsement of the trade and civic organizations of the District of Columbia and will be of material advantage to foreign corporations from all over the United States who desire to do business in the District of Columbia.

It is peculiarly appropriate that the District of Columbia adopt this legislation because of the disadvantage of its citizens through the inapplicability of the diverse citizenship statutes to residents of this jurisdiction. This deprives our merchants of access to the Federal courts under our local law, and makes it desirable for them to negotiate their trade under statutory provisions similar to those prevailing in the other major jurisdictions. You will note that our near neighbor, Maryland, has adopted a uniform sales act of substantially the same form.

Additional draft copies of this bill are now available to Corporation Counsel E. Barrett Prettyman.

RECOMMENDATION

It is recommended that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be asked to approve this draft of bill and to urge its introduction and passage in the present Congress.

WILLIAM A. ROBERTS,
People's Counsel, District of Columbia.

An identical bill passed the Senate unanimously at the last session of the Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That on and after July 1, 1937, all sales of goods in the District of Columbia shall be made under and in accordance with the following provisions of law:

PART I

FORMATION OF THE CONTRACT

SECTION 1. Contracts to sell and sales: (1) A contract to sell goods is a contract whereby the seller agrees to transfer the property in goods to the buyer for a consideration called the "price."

(2) A sale of goods is an agreement whereby the seller transfers the property in goods to the buyer for a consideration called the "price."

(3) A contract to sell or a sale may be absolute or conditional.

(4) There may be a contract to sell or a sale between one part owner and another.

SEC. 2. Capacity—Liabilities for necessaries: Capacity to buy and sell is regulated by the general law concerning capacity to contract, and to transfer and acquire property.

Where necessaries are sold and delivered to an infant, or to a person who by reason of mental incapacity or drunkenness is incompetent to contract, he must pay a reasonable price therefor.

"Necessaries" in this section means goods suitable to the condition in life of such infant or other person, and to his actual requirements at the time of delivery.

FORMALITIES OF THE CONTRACT

SEC. 3. Form of contract or sale: Subject to the provisions of this act and of any statute in that behalf, a contract to sell or a sale may be made in writing (either with or without seal), or by word of mouth, or partly in writing and partly by word of mouth or may be inferred from the conduct of the parties.

SEC. 4. Statute of frauds: (1) A contract to sell or a sale of any goods or choses in action of the value of $500 or upwards shall not be enforceable by action unless the buyer shall accept part of the goods or choses in action so contracted to be sold or sold, and actually receive the same, or give something in earnest to bind the contract, or in part payment, or unless some note or memorandum in writing of the contract or sale be signed by the party to be charged or his agent in that behalf.

(2) The provisions of this section apply to every such contract or sale, notwithstanding that the goods may be intended to be delivered at some future time or may not at the time of such contract or sale be actually made, procured, or provided, or fit or ready for delivery, or some act may be requisite for the making or completing thereof, or rendering the same fit for delivery; but if the goods are to be manufactured by the seller especially for the buyer and are not suitable for sale to others in the ordinary course of the seller's business, the provisions of this section shall not apply.

(3) There is an acceptance of goods within the meaning of this section when the buyer, either before or after delivery of the goods, expresses by words or conduct his assent to becoming the owner of those specific goods.

SUBJECT MATTER OF CONTRACT

SEC. 5. Existing and future goods: (1) The goods which form the subject of a contract to sell may be either existing goods, owned or possessed by the seller, or goods to be manufactured or acquired by the seller after the making of the contract to sell, in this act called future goods.

(2) There may be a contract to sell goods, the acquisition of which by the seller depends upon a contingency which may or may not happen.

(3) Where the parties purport to effect a present sale of future goods, the agreement operates as a contract to sell the goods.

SEC. 6. Undivided shares: (1) There may be a contract to sell or a sale of an undivided share of goods. If the parties intend to effect a present sale, the buyer, by force of the agreement, becomes an owner in common with the owner or owners of the remaining shares.

(2) In the case of fungible goods, there may be a sale of an undivided share of a specific mass, though the seller purports to sell and the buyer to buy a definite number, weight, or measure of the goods in the mass, and though the number, weight, or measure of the goods in the mass is undetermined. By such a sale the buyer becomes owner in common of such a share of the mass as the number, weight, or measure bought bears to the number, weight, or measure of the mass. If the mass contains less than the number, weight, or measure bought, the buyer becomes the owner of the whole mass and the seller is bound to make good the deficiency from similar goods unless a contrary intent appears.

SEC. 7. Destruction of goods sold: (1) Where the parties purport to sell specific goods, and the goods without the knowledge of the seller have wholly perished at the time when the agreement is made, the agreement is void.

(2) Where the parties purport to sell specific goods, and the goods without the knowledge of the seller have perished in part or have wholly or in a material part so deteriorated in quality as to be substantially changed in character, the buyer may at his option treat the sale—

(a) As avoided; or

(b) As transferring the property in all of the existing goods or in so much thereof as have not deteriorated, and as binding the buyer to pay the full agreed price if the sale was indivisible, or to pay the agreed price for the goods in which the property passes if the sale was divisible.

SEC. 8. Destruction of goods contracted to be sold: (1) Where there is a contract to sell specific goods, and subsequently, but before the risk passes to the buyer, without any fault on the part of the seller or the buyer, the goods wholly perish, the contract is thereby voided.

(2) Where there is a contract to sell specific goods, and subsequently, but before the risk passes to the buyer, without any fault of the seller or the buyer, part of the goods perish or the whole or a material part of the goods so deteriorate in quality as to be substantially changed in character, the buyer may at his option treat the contract—

(a) As avoided; or

(b) As binding the seller to transfer the property in all of the existing goods or in so much thereof as have not deteriorated, and as binding the buyer to pay the full agreed price if the contract was indivisible, or to pay the agreed price for so much of the goods as the seller, by the buyer's option, is bound to transfer if the contract was divisible.

THE PRICE

SEC. 9. Definition and ascertainment of price: (1) The price may be fixed by the contract, or may be left to be fixed in such manner as may be agreed, or it may be determined by the course of dealing between the parties.

(2) The price may be made payable in any personal property.

(3) Where transferring or promising to transfer any interest in real estate constitutes the whole or part of the consideration for transferring or for promising to transfer the property in goods, this act shall not apply.

(4) Where the price is not determined in accordance with the foregoing provisions, the buyer must pay a reasonable price. What is a reasonable price is a question of fact dependent on the circumstances of each particular case.

SEC. 10. Sale at a valuation: (1) Where there is a contract to sell or a sale of goods at a price or on terms to be fixed by a third person, and such third person without fault of the seller or the buyer cannot or does not fix the price or terms, the contract or the sale is thereby avoided; but if the goods or any part thereof have been delivered to and appropriated by the buyer, he must pay a reasonable price therefor.

(2) Where such third person is prevented from fixing the price or terms by fault of the seller or the buyer, the party not in fault may have such remedies against the party in fault as are allowed by parts IV and V of this act.

CONDITIONS AND WARRANTIES

SEC. 11. Effect of conditions: (1) Where the obligation of either party to a contract to sell or a sale is subject to any condition which is not performed, such party may refuse to proceed with the contract or sale or he may waive performance of the condition. If the other party has promised that the condition should happen or be performed, such first-mentioned party may also treat the nonperformance of the condition as a breach of warranty.

(2) Where the property in the goods has not passed, the buyer may treat the fulfillment by the sell of his obligations to furnish goods as described and as warranted expressly or by implication in the contract to sell as a condition of the obligation of the buyer to perform his promise to accept and pay for the goods.

SEC. 12. Definitions of express warranty: Any affirmation of fact or any promise by the seller relating to the goods is an express warranty if the natural tendency of such affirmation or promise is to induce the buyer to purchase the goods, and if the buyer purchases the goods relying thereon. No affirmation of the value of the goods, nor any statement purporting to be a statement of the seller's opinion only, shall be construed as a warranty.

SEC. 13. Implied warranties of title: In a contract to sell or a sale, unless a contrary intention appears, there is—

(1) An implied warranty on the part of the seller that in case of a sale he has a right to sell the goods, and that in case of a contract to sell he will have a right to sell the goods at the time when the property is to pass;

(2) An implied warranty that the buyer shall have and enjoy quiet possession of the goods as against any lawful claims existing at the time of the sale.

(3) An implied warranty that the goods shall be free at the time of the sale from any charge or encumbrance in favor of any third person, not declared or known to the buyer before or at the time when the contract or sale is made.

(4) This section shall not, however, be held to render liable a sheriff, auctioneer, mortgagee, or other person professing to sell by virtue of authority in fact or law, goods in which a third person has a legal or equitable interest.

SEC. 14. Implied warranty in sale by description: Where there is a contract to sell or a sale of goods by description, there is an implied warranty that the goods shall correspond with the description and if the contract or sale be by sample, as well as by description, it is not sufficient that the bulk of the goods corresponds with the sample if the goods do not also correspond with the description.

SEC. 15. Implied warranties of quality: Subject to the provisions of this act and of any statute in that behalf, there is no implied warranty or condition as to the quality or fitness for any particular purpose of goods supplied under a contract to sell or a sale, except as follows:

(1) Where the buyer, expressly or by implication, makes known to the seller the particular purpose for which the goods are required, and it appears that the buyer relies on the seller's skill or judgment (whether he be the grower or manufacturer or not), there is an implied warranty that the goods shall be reasonably fit for such purpose.

(2) Where the goods are bought by description from a seller who deals in goods of that description (whether he be the grower or manufacturer or not), there is an implied warranty that the goods shall be merchantable quality.

(3) If the buyer has examined the goods, there is no implied warranty as regards defects which such examination ought to have revealed.

(4) In the case of a contract to sell or a sale of a specified article under its patent or other trade name, there is no implied warranty as to its fitness for any particular purpose.

(5) An implied warranty or condition as to the quality or fitness for a particular purpose may be annexed by the usage of trade.

(6) An express warranty or condition does not negative a warranty or condition implied under this act unless inconsistent therewith.

SALE BY SAMPLE

SEC. 16. Implied warranties in sale by sample: In the case of a contract to sell or a sale by sample—

(a) There is an implied warranty that the bulk shall correspond with the sample in quality.

(b) There is an implied warranty that the buyer shall have a reasonable opportunity of comparing the bulk with the sample, except so far as otherwise provided in section 47 (3).

(c) If the seller is a dealer in goods of that kind, there is an implied warranty that the goods shall be free from any defect rendering them unmerchantable which would not be apparent on reasonable examination of the sample.

PART II

TRANSFER OF PROPERTY AS BETWEEN SELLER AND BUYER

SEC. 17. No property passes until goods are ascertained: Where there is a contract to sell unascertained goods no property in the goods is transferred to the buyer unless and until the goods are ascertained, but property in an undivided share of ascertained goods may be transferred as provided in section 6.

SEC. 18. Property in specific goods passes when parties so intend: (1) Where there is a contract to sell specific or ascertained goods, the property in them is transferred to the buyer at such time as the parties to the contract intend it to be transferred.

(2) For the purpose of ascertaining the intention of the parties, regard shall be had to the terms of the contract, the conduct of the parties, usages of trade, and the circumstances of the case.

SEC. 19. Rules for ascertaining intention: Unless a different intention appears, the following are rules for ascertaining the intention of the parties as to the time at which the property in the goods is to pass to the buyer:

Rule 1. Where there is an unconditional contract to sell specific goods, in a deliverable state, the property in the goods passes to the buyer when the contract is made and it is immaterial whether the time of payment, or the time of delivery, or both, be postponed.

Rule 2. Where there is a contract to sell specific goods and the seller is bound to do something to the goods, for the purpose of putting them into a deliverable state, the property does not pass until such thing is done.

Rule 3. (1) When goods are delivered to the buyer "on sale or return", or on other terms indicating an intention to make a present sale, but to give the buyer an option to return the goods instead of paying the price, the property passes to the buyer on delivery, but he may revest the property in the seller by returning or tendering the goods within the time fixed in the contract, or, if no time has been fixed, within a reasonable time.

(2) When goods are delivered to the buyer on approval or on trial or on satisfaction, or other similar terms, the property therein passes to the buyer—

(a) When he signifies his approval or acceptance to the seller or does any other act adopting the transaction;

(b) If he does not signify his approval or acceptance to the seller, but retains the goods without giving notice of rejection, then if a time has been fixed for the return of the goods, on the expiration of such time, and, if no time has been fixed, on the expiration of a reasonable time. What is a reasonable time is a question of fact.

Rule 4. (1) Where there is a contract to sell unascertained or future goods by description, and goods of that description and in a deliverable state are unconditionally appropriated to the contract, either by the seller with the assent of the buyer, or by the buyer with the assent of the seller, the property in the goods thereupon passes to the buyer. Such assent may be expressed or implied, and may be given either before or after the appropriation is made.

(2) Where, in pursuance of a contract to sell, the seller delivers the goods to the buyer, or to a carrier or other bailee (whether named by the buyer or not) for the purpose of transmission to or holding for the buyer, he is presumed to have unconditionally appropriated the goods to the contract, except in the cases provided for in the next rule and in section 20. This presumption is applicable, although by the terms of the contract the buyer is to pay the price before receiving delivery of the goods, and the goods are marked with the words "collect on delivery" or their equivalents.

Rule 5. If the contract to sell requires the seller to deliver the goods to the buyer, or at a particular place, or to pay the freight or cost of transportation to the buyer, or to a particular place, the property does not pass until the goods have been delivered to the buyer or reached the place agreed upon.

SEC. 20. Reservation of right of possession or property when goods are shipped: (1) Where there is a contract to sell specific goods, or where goods are subsequently appropriated to the contract, the seller may, by the terms of the contract or appropriation, reserve the right of possession or property in the goods until certain conditions have been fulfilled. The right of possession or property may be thus reserved notwithstanding the delivery of the goods to the buyer or to a carrier or other bailee for the purpose of transmission to the buyer.

(2) Where goods are shipped, and by the bill of lading the goods are deliverable to the seller or his agent, or to the order of the seller or of his agent, the seller thereby reserves the property in the goods. But if, except for the form of the bill of lading, the property would have passed to the buyer on shipment of the goods, the seller's property in the goods shall be deemed to be only for the purpose of securing performance by the buyer of his obligations under the contract.

(3) Where goods are shipped, and by the bill of lading the goods are deliverable to the order of the buyer or of his agent, but possession of the bill of lading is retained by the seller or his agent, the seller thereby reserves a right to the possession of the goods as against the buyer.

(4) Where the seller of goods draws on the buyer for the price and transmits the bill of exchange and bill of lading together to the buyer to secure acceptance or payment of the bill of exchange, the buyer is bound to return the bill of lading if he does not honor the bill of exchange, and if he wrongfully retains the bill of lading he acquires no added right thereby. If, however, the bill of lading provides that the goods are deliverable to the buyer or to the order of the buyer, or is endorsed in blank, or to the buyer by the consignee named therein, one who purchases in good faith, for value, the bill of lading, or goods from the buyer will obtain the property in the goods, although the bill of exchange has not been honored, provided that such purchaser has received delivery of the bill of lading endorsed by the consignee named therein, or of the goods, without notice of the facts, making the transfer wrongful.

SEC. 21. Sale by auction: In the case of a sale by auction—

(1) Where goods are put up for sale by auction in lots, each lot is the subject of a separate contract of sale.

(2) A sale by auction is complete when the auctioneer announces its completion by the fall of the hammer, or in other customary manner. Until such announcement is made, any bidder may retract his bid; and the auctioneer may withdraw the goods from sale unless the auction has been announced to be without reserve.

(3) A right to bid may be reserved expressly by or on behalf of the seller.

(4) Where notice has not been given that a sale by auction is subject to a right to bid on behalf of the seller, it shall not be lawful for the seller to bid himself or to employ or induce any person to bid at such sale on his behalf, or for the auctioneer to employ or induce any person to bid at such sale on behalf of the seller or knowingly to take any bid from the seller or any person employed by him. Any sale contravening this rule may be treated as fraudulent by the buyer.

SEC. 22. Risk of loss: Unless otherwise agreed, the goods remain at the seller's risk until the property therein is transferred to the buyer, but when the property therein is transferred to the buyer the goods are at the buyer's risk whether delivery has been made or not, except that—

(a) Where delivery of the goods has been made to the buyer or to a bailee for the buyer, in pursuance of the contract and the property in the goods has been retained by the seller merely to secure performance by the buyer of his obligations under the contract, the goods are at the buyer's risk from the time of such delivery.

(b) Where delivery has been delayed through the fault of either the buyer or seller the goods are at the risk of the party in fault as regards any loss which might not have occurred but for such fault.

TRANSFER OF TITLE

SEC. 23. Sale by a person not the owner: (1) Subject to the provisions of this act, where goods are sold by a person who is not the owner thereof, and who does not sell them under the authority or with the consent of the owner, the buyer acquires no better title to the goods than the seller had, unless the owner of the goods is by his conduct precluded from denying the seller's authority to sell.

(2) Nothing in this act, however, shall affect—

(a) The provisions of any factors' acts, recording acts, or any enactment enabling the apparent owner of goods to dispose of them as if he were the true owner thereof.

(b) The validity of any contract to sell or sale under any special common law or statutory power of sale or under the order of a court of competent jurisdiction.

SEC. 24. Sale by one having a voidable title: Where the seller of goods has a voidable title thereto, but his title has not been voided at the time of the sale, the buyer acquires a good title to the goods, provided he buys them in good faith, for value, and without notice of the seller's defect of title.

SEC. 25. Sale by seller in possession of goods already sold: Where a person having sold goods continues in possession of the goods, or of negotiable documents of title to the goods, the delivery or transfer by that person, or by an agent acting for him, of the goods or documents of title under any sale, pledge, or other disposition thereof, to any person receiving and paying value for the same in good faith and without notice of the previous sale, shall have the same effect as if the person making the delivery or transfer were expressly authorized by the owner of the goods to make the same.

SEC. 26. Creditors' rights against sold goods in seller's possession: Where a person having sold goods continues in possession of the goods, or of negotiable documents of title to the goods and such retention of possession is fraudulent in fact or is deemed fraudulent under any rule of law, a creditor or creditors of the seller may treat the sale as void.

SEC. 27. Definition of negotiable documents of title: A document of title in which it is stated that the goods referred to therein will be delivered to the bearer, or to the order of any person named in such document is a negotiable document of title within the meaning of this act.

SEC. 28. Negotiation of negotiable documents by delivery: A negotiable document of title may be negotiated by delivery—

(a) Where by the terms of the document the carrier, warehouseman, or other bailee issuing the same undertakes to deliver the goods to the bearer; or

(b) Where by the terms of the document the carrier, warehouseman, or other bailee issuing the same, undertakes to deliver the goods to the order of a specified person, and such person or a subsequent endorsee of the document has endorsed it in blank or to the bearer.

Where by the terms of a negotiable document of title the goods are deliverable to bearer or where a negotiable document of title has been endorsed in blank or to bearer, any holder may endorse the same to himself or to any specified person, and in such case the document shall thereafter be negotiated only by the endorsement of such endorsee.

SEC. 29. Negotiation of negotiable documents by endorsement: A negotiable document of title may be negotiated by the endorsement of the person to whose offer the goods are by the terms of the document deliverable. Such endorsement may be in blank, to bearer, or to a specified person. If endorsed to a specified person, it may be again negotiated by the endorsement of such person in blank, to bearer, or to another specified person. Subsequent negotiations may be made in like manner.

SEC. 30. Negotiable documents of title marked "not negotiable": If a document of title which contains an undertaking by a carrier, warehouseman, or other bailee to deliver the goods to the bearer, to a specified person or order, or to the order of a specified person, or which contains words of like import, has placed upon it the words "not negotiable", "nonnegotiable", or the like, such a document may nevertheless be negotiated by the holder and is a negotiable document of title within the meaning of this act. But nothing in this act contained shall be construed as limiting or defining the effect upon the obligations of the carrier, warehouseman, or other bailee issuing a document of title or placing thereon the words "not negotiable", "nonnegotiable", or the like.

SEC. 31. Transfer of nonnegotiable documents: A document of title which is not in such form that it can be negotiated by delivery may be transferred by the holder by delivery to a purchaser or donee. A nonnegotiable document cannot be negotiated and the endorsement of such a document gives the transferee no additional right.

SEC. 32. Who may negotiate a document: A negotiable document may be negotiated by any person in possession of the same, however such possession may have been acquired if, by the terms of the document, the bailee issuing it undertakes to deliver the goods to the order of such person, or if at the time of negotiation the document is in such form that it may be negotiated by delivery.

SEC. 33. Rights of person to whom document has been negotiated: A person to whom a negotiable document of title has been duly negotiated acquires thereby—

(a) Such title to the goods as the person negotiating the document to him had or had ability to convey to a purchaser in good faith for value and also such title to the goods as the person to whose order the goods were to be delivered by the terms of the document had or had ability to convey to a purchaser in good faith for value; and

(b) The direct obligation of the bailee issuing the document to hold possession of the goods for him according to the terms of the document as fully as if such bailee had contracted directly with him.

SEC. 34. Rights of person to whom document has been transferred: A person to whom a document of title has been transferred, but not negotiated, acquires thereby, as against the transferor, the title to the goods, subject to the terms of any agreement with the transferor.

If the document is nonnegotiable, such person also acquires the right to notify the bailee who issued the document of the transfer thereof, and thereby to acquire the direct obligation of such bailee to hold possession of the goods for him according to the terms of the document.

Prior to the notification of such bailee by the transferor or transferee of a nonnegotiable document of title, the title of the transferee to the goods and the right to acquire the obligation of such bailee may be defeated by the levy of an attachment or execution upon the goods by a creditor of the transferor, or by a notification to such bailee by the transferor or a subsequent purchaser from the transferor of a subsequent sale of the goods by the transferor.

SEC. 35. Transfer of negotiable document without endorsement: Where a negotiable document of title is transferred for value by delivery, and the endorsement of the transferor is essential for negotiation, the transferee acquires a right against the transferor to compel him to endorse the document unless a contrary intention appears. The negotiation shall take effect as of the time when the endorsement is actually made.

SEC. 36. Warranties on sale of document: A person who for value negotiates or transfers a document of title by endorsement or delivery, including one who assigns for value a claim secured by a document of title, unless a contrary intention appears, warrants:

(a) That the document is genuine;

(b) That he has a legal right to negotiate or transfer it;

(c) That he has knowledge of no fact which would impair the validity or worth of the document; and

(d) That he has a right to transfer the title to the goods and that the goods are merchantable or fit for a particular purpose whenever such warranties would have been implied if the contract of the parties had been to transfer without a document of title the goods represented thereby.

SEC. 37. Endorser not a guarantor: The endorsement of a document of title shall not make the endorser liable for any failure on the part of the bailee who issued the document or previous endorsers thereof to fulfill their respective obligations.

SEC. 38. When negotiation not impaired by fraud, mistake, or duress: The validity of the negotiation of a negotiable document of title is not impaired by the fact that the negotiation was a breach of duty on the part of the person making the negotiation, or by the fact that the owner of the document was deprived of the possession of the same by loss, theft, fraud, accident, mistake, duress, or conversion, if the person to whom the document was negotiated or a person to whom the document was subsequently negotiated paid value therefor in good faith without notice of the breach of duty, or loss, theft, fraud, accident, mistake, duress, or conversion.

SEC. 39. Attachment or levy upon goods for which a negotiable document has been issued: If goods are delivered to a bailee by the owner or by a person whose act in conveying the title to them to a purchaser in good faith for value would bind the owner and a negotiable document of title is issued for them, they cannot thereafter while in the possession of such bailee be attached by garnishment or otherwise or be levied under an execution unless the document be first surrendered to the bailee or its negotiation enjoined. The bailee shall in no case be compelled to deliver up the actual possession of the goods until the document is surrendered to him or impounded by the court.

SEC. 40. Creditors' remedies to reach negotiable documents: A creditor whose debtor is the owner of a negotiable document of title shall be entitled to such aid from courts of appropriate jurisdiction by injunction and otherwise in attaching such document or in satisfying the claim by means thereof as is allowed at law or in equity in regard to property which cannot readily be attached or levied upon by ordinary legal process.

PART III

PERFORMANCE OF THE CONTRACT

SEC. 41. Seller must deliver and buyer accept goods: It is the duty of the seller to deliver the goods, and of the buyer to accept and pay for them, in accordance with the terms of the contract to sell or sale.

SEC. 42. Delivery and payment are concurrent conditions: Unless otherwise agreed, delivery of the goods and payment of the price are concurrent conditions; that is to say, the seller must be ready and willing to give possession of the goods to the buyer in exchange for the price and the buyer must be ready and willing to pay the price in exchange for possession of the goods.

SEC. 43. Place, time, and manner of delivery: (1) Whether it is for the buyer to take possession of the goods or for the seller to send them to the buyer is a question depending in each case on the contract, express or implied, between the parties. Apart from any such contract, express or implied, or usage of trade to the contrary, the place of delivery is the seller's place of business if he have one, and if not his residence; but in case of a contract to sell or a sale of specific goods, which to the knowledge of the parties when the contract or the sale was made were in some other place, then that place is the place of delivery.

(2) Where by a contract to sell or a sale the seller is bound to send the goods to the buyer, but no time for sending them is fixed, the seller is bound to send them within a reasonable time.

(3) Where the goods at the time of sale are in the possession of a third person, the seller has not fulfilled his obligation to deliver to the buyer unless and until such third person acknowledges to the buyer that he holds the goods on the buyer's behalf; but as against all others than the seller the buyer shall be regarded as having received delivery from the time when such third person first has notice of the sale. Nothing in this section, however, shall affect the operation of the issue or transfer of any document of title to goods.

(4) Demand or tender of delivery may be treated as ineffectual unless made at a reasonable hour. What is a reasonable hour is a question of fact.

(5) Unless otherwise agreed, the expenses of and incidental to putting the goods into a deliverable state must be borne by the seller.

SEC. 44. Delivery of wrong quantity: (1) Where the seller delivers to the buyer a quantity of goods less than he contracted to sell, the buyer may reject them, but if the buyer accepts or retains the goods so delivered, knowing that the seller is not going to perform the contract in full, he must pay for them at the contract rate. If, however, the buyer has used or disposed of the goods delivered before he knows that the seller is not going to perform his contract in full, the buyer shall not be liable for more than the fair value to him of the goods so received.

(2) Where the seller delivers to the buyer a quantity of goods larger than he contracted to sell, the buyer may accept the goods included in the contract and reject the rest, or he may reject the whole. If the buyer accepts the whole of the goods so delivered he must pay for them at the contract rate.

(3) Where the seller delivers to the buyer the goods he contracted to sell mixed with goods of a different description not included in the contract, the buyer may accept the goods which are in accordance with the contract and reject the rest, or he may reject the whole.

(4) The provisions of this section are subject to any usage of trade, special agreement, or course of dealing between the parties.

SEC. 45. Delivery in installments: (1) Unless otherwise agreed, the buyer of goods is not bound to accept delivery thereof by installments.

(2) Where there is a contract to sell goods to be delivered by stated installments, which are to be separately paid for, and the seller makes defective deliveries in respect of one or more installments, or the buyer neglects or refuses to make delivery of or pay for one or more installments, it depends in each case on the terms of the contract and the circumstances of the case, whether the breach of contract is so material as to justify the injured party in refusing to proceed further and suing for damages for breach of the entire contract, or whether the breach is severable, giving rise to a claim for compensation but not to a right to treat the whole contract as broken.

SEC. 46. Delivery to a carrier on behalf of the buyer: (1) Where, in pursuance of a contract to sell or a sale, the seller is authorized or required to send the goods to the buyer, delivery of the goods to a carrier, whether named by the buyer or not, for the purpose of transmission to the buyer is deemed to be a delivery of the goods to the buyer, except in the cases provided for in section 19, rule 5, or unless a contrary intent appears.

(2) Unless authorized by the buyer, the seller must make such contract with the carrier on behalf of the buyer as may be reasonable, having regard to the nature of the goods and the other circumstances of the case. If the seller omit so to do, and the goods are lost or damaged in course of transit, the buyer may decline to treat the delivery to the carrier as a delivery to himself, or may hold the seller responsible in damages.

(3) Unless otherwise agreed, where goods are sent by the seller to the buyer under circumstances in which the seller knows or ought to know that it is usual to insure, the seller must give such notice to the buyer as may enable him to insure them during their transit, and, if the seller fails to do so, the goods shall be deemed to be at his risk during such transit.

SEC. 47. Right to examine the goods: (1) Where goods are delivered to the buyer which he has not previously examined, he is not deemed to have accepted them unless and until he has had a reasonable opportunity of examining them for the purpose of ascertaining whether they are in conformity with the contract.

(2) Unless otherwise agreed, when the seller tenders delivery of goods to the buyer, he is bound, on request, to afford the buyer a reasonable opportunity of examining the goods for the purpose of ascertaining whether they are in conformity with the contract.

(3) Where goods are delivered to a carrier by the seller, in accordance with an order from or agreement with the buyer, upon the terms that the goods shall not be delivered by the carrier to the buyer until he has paid the price, whether such terms are indicated by marking the goods with the words "collect on delivery", or otherwise, the buyer is not entitled to examine the goods before payment of the price in the absence of agreement permitting such examination.

SEC. 48. What constitutes acceptance: The buyer is deemed to have accepted the goods when he intimates to the seller that he has accepted them, or when the goods have been delivered to him, and he does any act in relation to them which is inconsistent with the ownership of the seller, or when, after the lapse of a reasonable time, he retains the goods without intimating to the seller that he has rejected them.

SEC. 49. Acceptance does not bar action for damages: In the absence of express or implied agreement of the parties, acceptance of the goods by the buyer shall not discharge the seller from liability in damages or other legal remedy for breach of any promise or warranty in the contract to sell or the sale. But if, after acceptance of the goods, the buyer fail to give notice to the seller of the breach of any promise or warranty within a reasonable time after the buyer knows or ought to know of such breach, the seller shall not be liable therefor.

SEC. 50. Buyer is not bound to return goods wrongly delivered: Unless otherwise agreed, where goods are delivered to the buyer, and he refused to accept them, having the right so to do, he is not bound to return them to the seller, but it is sufficient if he notifies the seller that he refuses to accept them.

SEC. 51. Buyer's liability for failing to accept delivery: When the seller is ready and willing to deliver the goods, and requests the buyer to take delivery, and the buyer does not within a reasonable time after such request take delivery of the goods, he is liable to the seller for any loss occasioned by his neglect or refusal to take delivery, and also for a reasonable charge for the care and custody of the goods. If the neglect or refusal of the buyer to take delivery amounts to a repudiation or breach of the entire contract, the seller shall have the right against the goods and on the contract hereinafter provided in favor of the seller when the buyer is in default.

PART IV

RIGHTS OF UNPAID SELLER AGAINST THE GOODS

SEC. 52. Definition of unpaid seller: (1) The seller of goods is deemed to be an unpaid seller within the meaning of this act—

(a) When the whole of the price has not been paid or tendered.

(b) When a bill of exchange or other negotiable instrument has been received as conditional payment, and the condition on which it was received has been broken by reason of the dishonor of the instrument, the insolvency of the buyer, or otherwise.

(2) In this part of this act the term "seller" includes an agent of the seller to whom the bill of lading has been endorsed, or a consignor or agent who has himself paid, or is directly responsible for, the price, or any other person who is in the position of a seller.

SEC. 53. Remedies of an unpaid seller: (1) Subject to the provisions of this act, notwithstanding that the property in the goods may have passed to the buyer, the unpaid seller of goods, as such, has—

(a) A lien on the goods or right to retain them for the price while he is in possession of them;

(b) In case of insolvency of the buyer, the right of stopping the goods in transitu after he has parted with the possession of them;

(c) A right of resale as limited by this act; and

(d) A right to rescind the sale as limited by this act.

(2) Where the property in goods has not passed to the buyer, the unpaid seller has, in addition to his other remedies, a right of withholding delivery similar to and coextensive with his rights of lien and stoppage in transitu where the property has passed to the buyer.

UNPAID SELLER'S LIEN

SEC. 54. When right of lien may be exercised: (1) Subject to the provisions of this act, the unpaid seller of goods who is in possession of them is entitled to retain possession of them until payment or tender of the price in the following cases, namely—

(a) Where the goods have been sold without any stipulation as to credit;

(b) Where the goods have been sold on credit, but the term of credit has expired; and

(c) Where the buyer becomes insolvent.

(2) The seller may exercise his right of lien, notwithstanding that he is in possession of the goods as agent or bailee for the buyer.

SEC. 55. Lien after part delivery: Where an unpaid seller has made part delivery of th. goods, he may exercise his right of lien on the remainder, unless such part delivery has been made under such circumstances as to show an intent to waive the lien or right of retention.

SEC. 56. When lien is lost: (1) The unpaid seller of goods loses his lien thereon—

(a) When he delivers the goods to a carrier or other bailee for the purpose of transmission to the buyer without reserving the property in the goods or the right to the possession thereof;

(b) When the buyer or his agent lawfully obtains possession of the goods; and

(c) By waiver thereof.

(2) The unpaid seller of goods, having a lien thereon, does not lose his lien by reason only that he has obtained judgment or decree for the price of the goods.

STOPPAGE IN TRANSIT

SEC. 57. Seller may stop goods on buyer's insolvency: Subject to the provisions of this act, when the buyer of goods is or becomes insolvent, the unpaid seller who has parted with the possession of the goods has the right of stopping them in transitu; that is to say, he may resume possession of the goods at any time while they are in transit, and he will then become entitled to the same rights in regard to the goods as he would have had if he had never parted with the possession.

SEC. 58. When goods are in transit: (1) Goods are in transit within the meaning of section 57—

(a) From the time when they are delivered to a carrier by land or water, or other bailee for the purpose of transmission to the buyer, until the buyer, or his agent in that behalf, takes delivery of them from such carrier or other bailee; and

(b) If the goods are rejected by the buyer, and the carrier or other bailee continues in possession of them, even if the seller has refused to receive them back.

(2) Goods are no longer in transit within the meaning of section 57—

(a) If the buyer, or his agent in that behalf, obtains delivery of the goods before their arrival at the appointed destination;

(b) If, after the arrival of the goods at the appointed destination, the carrier or other bailee acknowledges to the buyer or his agent that he holds the goods on his behalf and continues in possession of them as bailee for the buyer or his agent; and it is immaterial that a further destination for the goods may have been indicated by the buyer; and

(c) If the carrier or other bailee wrongfully refuses to deliver the goods to the buyer or his agent in that behalf.

(3) If goods are delivered to a ship chartered by the buyer, it is a question depending on the circumstances of the particular case, whether they are in the possession of the master as a carrier or as agent of the buyer.

(4) If part delivery of the goods has been made to the buyer, or his agent in that behalf, the remainder of the goods may be stopped in transitu, unless such part delivery has been made under such circumstances as to show an agreement with the buyer to give up possession of the whole of the goods.

SEC. 59. Ways of exercising the right to stop: (1) The unpaid seller may exercise his right of stoppage in transitu either by obtaining actual possession of the goods or by giving notice of his claim to the carrier or other bailee in whose possession the goods are. Such notice may be given either to the person in actual possession of the goods or to his principal. In the latter case the notice, to be effectual, must be given at such time and under such circumstances that the principal, by the exercise of reasonable diligence, may prevent a delivery to the buyer.

(2) When notice of stoppage in transitu is given by the seller to the carrier, or other bailee in possession of the goods, he must redeliver the goods to, or according to the directions of, the seller. The expenses of such delivery must be borne by the seller. If, however, a negotiable document of title representing the goods has been issued by the carrier or other bailee, he shall not be obliged to deliver or justified in delivering the goods to the seller unless such document is first surrendered for cancelation.

RESALE BY THE SELLER

SEC. 60. When and how resale may be made: (1) Where the goods are of perishable nature, or where the seller expressly reserves the right of resale in case the buyer should make default, or where the buyer has been in default in the payment of the price an unreasonable time, an unpaid seller having a right of lien or having stopped the goods in transitu may resell the goods. He shall not thereafter be liable to the original buyer upon the contract to sell or the sale or for any profit made by such resale, but may recover from the buyer damages for any loss occasioned by the breach of the contract or the sale.

(2) Where a resale is made, as authorized in this section, the buyer acquires a good title as against the original buyer.

(3) It is not essential to the validity of a resale that notice of an intention to resell the goods be given by the seller to the original buyer. But where the right to resell is not based on the perishable nature of the goods or upon an express provision of the contract or the sale, the giving or failure to give such notice shall be relevant in any issue involving the question whether the buyer had been in default an unreasonable time before the resale was made.

(4) It is not essential to the validity of a resale that notice of the time and place of such resale should be given by the seller to the original buyer.

(5) The seller is bound to exercise reasonable care and judgment in making a resale, and subject to this requirement may make a resale either by public or private sale.

RECISSION BY THE SELLER

SEC. 61. When and how the seller may rescind the sale: (1) An unpaid seller having the right of lien or having stopped the goods in transitu, may rescind the transfer of title and resume the property in the goods, where he expressly reserved the right to do so in case the buyer should make default, or where the buyer has been in default in the payment of the price an unreasonable time. The seller shall not thereafter be liable to the buyer upon the contract to sell or the sale, but may recover from the buyer damages for any loss occasioned by the breach of the contract or the sale.

(2) The transfer of title shall not be held to have been rescinded by an unpaid seller until he has manifested by notice to the buyer or by some other overt act an intention to rescind. It is not necessary that such overt act should be communicated to the buyer, but the giving or failure to give notice to the buyer of the intention to rescind shall be relevant in any issue involving the question whether the buyer had been in default an unreasonable time before the right of rescission was asserted.

SEC. 62. Effect of sale of goods subject to lien or stoppage in transitu: Subject to the provisions of this act, the unpaid seller's right of lien or stoppage in transitu is not affected by any sale, or other disposition of the goods which the buyer may have made, unless the seller has assented thereto.

If, however, a negotiable document of title has been issued for goods, no seller's lien or right of stoppage in transitu shall defeat the right of any purchaser for value in good faith to whom such document has been negotiated, whether such negotiations be prior or subsequent to the notification to the carrier, or other bailee who issued such document, of the seller's claim to a lien or right of stoppage in transitu.

PART V

ACTION FOR BREACH OF THE CONTRACT; REMEDIES OF THE SELLER

SEC. 63. Action for the price: (1) Where, under a contract to sell or a sale, the property in the goods has passed to the buyer, and the buyer wrongfully neglects or refuses to pay for the goods according to the terms of the contract or the sale, the seller may maintain an action against him for the price of the goods.

(2) Where, under a contract to sell or a sale, the price is payable on a day certain, irrespective of delivery or of transfer of title, and the buyer wrongfully neglects or refuses to pay such price, the seller may maintain an action for the price, although the property in the goods has not passed, and the goods have not been appropriated to the contract. But it shall be a defense to such an action that the seller at any time before judgment in such action has manifested an inability to perform the contract or the sale on his part or an intention not to perform it.

(3) Although the property in the goods has not passed, if they cannot readily be resold for a reasonable price, and if the provisions of section 64 (4) are not applicable, the seller may offer to deliver the goods to the buyer, and, if the buyer refuses to receive them, may notify the buyer that the goods are thereafter held by the seller as bailee for the buyer. Thereafter the seller may treat the goods as the buyer's and may maintain an action for the price.

SEC. 64. Action for damages for nonacceptance of the goods: (1) Where the buyer wrongfully neglects or refuses to accept and pay for the goods, the seller may maintain an action against him for damages for nonacceptance.

(2) The measure of damages is the estimated loss directly and naturally resulting, in the ordinary course of events, from the buyer's breach of contract.

(3) Where there is an available market for the goods in question, the measure of damages is, in the absence of special circumstances, showing proximate damage of a greater amount, the difference between the contract price and the market or current price at the time or times when the goods ought to have been accepted, or, if no time was fixed for acceptance, then at the time of the refusal to accept.

(4) If, while labor or expense of material amount are necessary on the part of the seller to enable him to fulfill his obligations under the contract to sell or the sale, the buyer repudiates the contract or the sale, or notifies the seller to proceed no further therewith, the buyer shall be liable to the seller for no greater damages than the seller would have suffered if he did nothing toward carrying out the contract or the sale after receiving notice of the buyer's repudiation or countermand. The profit the seller would have made if the contract or the sale had been fully performed shall be considered in estimating such damages.

SEC. 65. When seller may rescind contract or sale: Where the goods have not been delivered to the buyer, and the buyer has repudiated the contract to sell or sale, or has manifested his inability to perform his obligations thereunder, or has committed a material breach thereof, the seller may totally rescind the contract or the sale by giving notice of his election so to do to the buyer.

REMEDIES OF THE BUYER

SEC. 66. Action for converting or detaining goods: Where the property in the goods has passed to the buyer and the seller wrongfully neglects or refuses to deliver the goods, the buyer may maintain any action allowed by law to the owner of goods of similar kind when wrongfully converted or withheld.

SEC. 67. Action for failing to deliver goods: (1) Where the property in the goods has not passed to the buyer, and the seller wrongfully neglects or refuses to deliver the goods, the buyer may maintain an action against the seller for damages for nondelivery.

(2) The measure of damages is the loss directly and naturally resulting in the ordinary course of events from the seller's breach of contract.

(3) Where there is an available market for the goods in question, the measure of damages, in the absence of special circumstances showing proximate damages of a greater amount, is the difference between the contract price and the market or current price of the goods at the time or times when they ought to have been delivered or if no time was fixed, then at the time of the refusal to deliver.

SEC. 68. Specific performance: Where the seller has broken a contract to deliver specific or ascertained goods, a court having the powers of a court of equity may, if it thinks fit, on the application of the buyer, by its judgment or decree direct that the contract shall be performed specifically, without giving the seller the option of retaining the goods on payment of damages. The judgment or decree may be unconditional or upon such terms and conditions as to damages, payment of the price, and otherwise, as to the court may seem just.

SEC. 69. Remedies for breach of warranty: (1) Where there is a breach of warranty by the seller, the buyer may, at his election—

(a) Accept or keep the goods and set up against the seller the breach of warranty by way of recoupment in diminution or extinction of the price;

(b) Accept or keep the goods and maintain an action against the seller for damages for the breach of warranty;

(c) Refuse to accept the goods, if the property therein has not passed, and maintain an action against the seller for damages for the breach of warranty; and

(d) Rescind the contract to sell, or the sale, and refuse to receive the goods; or if the goods have already been received return them or offer to return them to the seller and recover the price or any part thereof which has been paid.

(2) When the buyer has claimed and has been granted a remedy in any one of these ways, no other remedy can thereafter be granted.

(3) Where the goods have been delivered to the buyer, he cannot rescind the sale if he knew of the breach of warranty when he accepted the goods, or if he fails to notify the seller within a reasonable time of the election to rescind, or if he fails to return or to offer to return the goods to the seller in substantially as good condition as they were in at the time the property was transferred to the buyer. But if deterioration or injury of the goods is due to the breach of warranty, such deterioration or injury shall not prevent the buyer from returning or offering to return the goods to the seller and rescinding the sale.

(4) Where the buyer is entitled to rescind the sale and elects to do so, the buyer shall cease to be liable for the price upon returning or offering to return the goods. If the price or any part thereof has already been paid, the seller shall be liable to repay so much thereof as has been paid, concurrently with the return of the goods, or immediately after an offer to return the goods in exchange for repayment of the price.

(5) Where the buyer is entitled to rescind the sale and elects to do so, if the seller refuses to accept an offer of the buyer to return the goods, the buyer shall thereafter be deemed to hold the goods as bailee for the seller, but subject to a lien to secure the repayment of any portion of the price which has been paid, and with the remedies for the enforcement of such lien allowed to an unpaid seller by section 53.

(6) The measure of damages for breach of warranty is the loss directly and naturally resulting, in the ordinary course of events, from the breach of warranty.

(7) In the case of breach of warranty of quality, such loss, in the absence of special circumstances showing proximate damage of a greater amount, is the difference between the value of the goods at the time of delivery to the buyer and the value they would have had if they had answered to the warranty.

SEC. 70. Interest and special damages: Nothing in this act shall affect the right of the buyer or the seller to recover interest or special damages in any case where by law interest or special damages may be recoverable, or to recover money paid where the consideration for the payment of it has failed.

PART VI

PRACTICE OF LAW IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (S. 204) relative to the qualifications of practitioners of law in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Utah whether this bill is identical with one on this subject which was on the calendar last year?

Mr. KING. Yes; it is.

Mr. COPELAND. I personally have no disposition to defer action on the bill, but I recall that last year, for some reason or other, constituents of mine were in opposition to the measure then on the calendar. If the Senator does not mind——

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to make an observation, there was objection to this bill when it was first introduced because there seemed to be provision for the exclusion of attorneys from other States who would come here temporarily for the trial or participation in the trial of a specific case in which they were interested. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] objected to the bill until that matter was corrected by a very proper amendment, namely, a provision that attorneys from other jurisdictions might come to the District of Columbia and be permitted to practice in particular cases in which they were interested.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I dare say it was exactly that point about which my constituents were critical of the former bill; but, if the Senator does not mind, I should like to have the bill go over for today. I will communicate at once with the persons to whom I have referred, because I have no disposition whatever to have action on the bill deferred.

PENALTIES FOR LOTTERIES IN THE DISTRICT

The bill (S. 711) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia", approved March 3, 1901, as amended, and particularly sections 863, 911, and 914 of the said code, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia", approved March 3, 1901, and the acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, constituting a Code of Law for the District of Columbia, be, and the same hereby are, amended as follows:

Section 863 of such act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 863. If any person shall within the District keep, set up, or promote, or be concerned as owner, agent, or clerk, or in any other manner, in managing, carrying on, promoting, or advertising, directly or indirectly, any policy lottery, policy shop, or any lottery, or shall sell or transfer any chance, right, or interest, tangible or intangible, in any lottery or shall sell or transfer any ticket, certificate, bill, token, or other device, purporting or intended to guarantee or assure to any person or entitle him to a chance of drawing or obtaining a prize, to be drawn in any lottery, or in a game or device commonly known as policy lottery or policy or shall, for himself or another person, sell or transfer, or have in his possession for the purpose of sale or transfer, a chance or ticket in or share of a ticket in any policy lottery or any such bill, certificate, token, or other device, he shall be fined upon conviction of each said offense not more than $1,000 or be imprisoned not more than 3 years, or both. The possession of any such tickets, certificates, bills, slips, tokens, or other device shall be prima-facie evidence of purpose or intent of selling, transferring, exchanging, or negotiating the same."

SEC. 2. There is hereby added to said act a new section to be known as section 863 (a), to read as follows:

"SEC. 863. (a) If any person shall within the District have in his possession, knowingly, any ticket, certificate, bill, slip, token, paper, writing, or other device used, or to be used, or adapted, devised, or designed for the purpose of playing, carrying on, or conducting any lottery, or the game or device commonly known as policy lottery or policy, he shall be fined upon conviction of each said offense not more than $500 or be imprisoned for not more than 6 months, or both."

SEC. 3. Section 911 of such act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 911. Upon complaint, under oath, before the police court, or a United States commissioner, setting forth that the affiant believes and has good cause to believe that there are concealed in any house or place articles stolen, taken by robbers, embezzled, or obtained by false pretenses, forged or counterfeited coins, stamps, labels, bank bills, or other instruments, or dies, plates, stamps, or brands for making the same, books or printed papers, drawings, engravings, photographs, or pictures of an indecent or obscene character, or instruments for immoral use, or any gaming table, device, or apparatus kept for the purpose of unlawful gaming, or any lottery tickets or lottery policies, or any book, paper, memorandum, or device for or used in recording any bet or deposit of money or thing or consideration of value received for any share, ticket, certificate, writing, bill, slip, or token in any pool or lottery or as a wager on or in connection with any race, game, contest, election, or other gambling transaction or device of an unlawful nature as defined in sections 863, 864, 865, 866, 868, and 869, of the act of March 3, 1901, as amended and supplemented, particularly describing the house or place to be searched, the things to be seized, substantially alleging the offense in relation thereto, and describing the person to be seized, the said court or United States commissioner may issue a warrant to the marshal or any officer of the Metropolitan Police commanding him to search such house or place for the property or other things, and, if found, to bring the same, together with the person to be seized, before the police court.

"The said warrant shall have annexed to it, or inserted therein, a copy of the affidavit upon which it is issued, and may be substantially in the form following:

"'Whereas there has been filed before ——— an affidavit, of which the following is a copy [here insert]. These are therefore to command you to enter [here describe the place] and there diligently search for the said articles, goods, or chattels in the said affidavit described, and that you bring the same, or any part thereof, found on said search and also the body of ——— before the police court, to be dealt with and disposed of according to law.'"

SEC. 4. Section 914 of such act is hereby amended by adding a new paragraph thereto, the same to read as follows:

"If the property seized be articles, games, devices, or contrivances maintained, kept, set up, or used in violation of sections 863, 863 (a), 864, 865, 866, 867, 868, or 869 of this Code, they shall be ordered destroyed under direction of court, irrespective of any trial or the outcome thereof.

If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provisions to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

The amendment to the title was agreed to.

CONGRESSIONAL MEDAL OF HONOR FOR PLEAS SANDERS

The bill (S. 296) to authorize the award of the Congressional Medal of Honor for distinguished service to Pleas Sanders was announced as next in order.

Mr. CLARK. Reserving the right to object, I ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, with regard to this particular bill, what has been the policy of the committee in regard to congressional action concerning particular decorations of soldiers or members of the Military Establishment.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The bill under consideration authorizes the War Department to review the record of Sgt. Pleas Sanders, who received several awards for heroism in action and for brilliant leadership in the World War. Among these awards was the Distinguished Service Cross. Under this bill the War Department is to determine whether he should have received a Congressional Medal of Honor instead of the Distinguished Service Cross.

Mr. CLARK. What I was trying to ascertain from the chairman of the committee is whether it has been the policy of the committee heretofore to advise congressional action upon such individual claims.

I have in mind one particular soldier who was killed under circumstances of the most outstanding gallantry, a man who actually sacrificed himself knowingly for the purpose of evacuating a number of wounded, and who was recommended by his commanding officer for a Distinguished Service Cross or a Congressional Medal of Honor, but who was never awarded the Congressional Medal or the Distinguished Service Cross. Apparently, the records in the War Department do not now show that the recommendation was ever made, although the contention is easily susceptible of proof, because the commanding officer is still alive. I have been extremely reluctant to introduce a measure for the decoration of that man, although I am thoroughly convinced that he should be decorated, because I have been reluctant to open up congressional action on individual cases.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Committee on Military Affairs will be glad to undertake to correct any injustice that may have been done the man to whom the Senator from Missouri has referred; and I trust the Senator will introduce a bill for that purpose.

Mr. CLARK. Yes; but I have been very reluctant to make such a move.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, is it not a fact that the law prevents the issuing of medals of honor, crosses, or bars, or other suitable emblems of various kinds to any person after more than 5 years from the date of the act or service justifying the award?

Mr. CLARK. I understand that to be a fact.

Mr. WALSH. It is the law applicable to the Navy. No decoration can be made or authorized after the expiration of the period of 5 years except by special act of Congress?

Mr. CLARK. I think that is true.

Mr. WALSH. The procedure usually is for the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy to make a recommendation. The Committee on Naval Affairs now has before it a recommendation from the Navy Department suggesting a decoration, notwithstanding the fact that the 5-year period has expired.

Mr. CLARK. I think the general law is altogether too drastic, because I know there are a great many extremely meritorious cases upon which the authorities have not been able to act, by reason of the fact that it is necessary to go through the very cumbersome practice of passing an act of Congress before the decoration can be awarded.

Mr. WALSH. I do not think the Committee on Military Affairs or the Committee on Naval Affairs would take any action recognizing distinguished service without the favorable recommendation of the War Department or the Navy Department.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, in view of the fact that I introduced this bill, I will say for the benefit of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], as well as other Senators, that the Committee on Military Affairs has decided in this case, as well as in all others, that it will not undertake by legislation to confer the Congressional Medal or the Distinguished Service Cross or any other decoration, but that it will remove the bar of limitation and allow the War Department to consider it.

As a part of my remarks, and so that there may be no misunderstanding in the future about the matter, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point the report from the Committee on Military Affairs in this particular case, which is Calendar No. 44, Report No. 43.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the report will be printed in the RECORD.

The report (No. 43) is as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 296) to authorize the award of the Congressional Medal of Honor for distinguished service to Pleas Sanders, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with a recommendation that it do pass.

A measure identical with S. 296 was reported favorably by the Senate Military Affairs Committee during the Seventy-fourth Congress and was passed by the Senate on May 12, 1936. The bill provides for a review by the proper agencies in the War Department of the evidence in Sanders' case, with a view to ascertaining if a Congressional Medal of Honor should have been granted to him instead of the Distinguished Service Cross. If it is determined by such a review that the Congressional Medal of Honor should be awarded, S. 296 authorizes the award.

Sanders was honorably discharged April 28, 1919, as a sergeant, served overseas during the World War from April 2, 1918, until April 15, 1919, and was wounded in action on October 10, 1918. He was cited for gallantry in action and was held to be entitled to wear a Silver Star on the Victory Medal ribbon "for gallantry in action near Jaulgonne, France, July 26, 1918, and for his brilliant leadership of his platoon." He was also awarded the Distinguished Service Cross for extraordinary heroism in action near Cunel, France, October 10, 1918, the date on which he was wounded in action. In view of all the evidence in this case, the committee feels that Sanders is entitled to the hearing provided in S. 296.

Senate Report No. 1969, Seventy-fourth Congress, second session, to accompany S. 4099, follows:

"The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4099) to authorize the award of the Congressional Medal of Honor for distinguished service to Pleas Sanders, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with a recommendation that it do pass amended as follows:

"Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following: 'That the President is hereby authorized to cause the evidence on which the award of the Distinguished Service Cross was made to Pleas Sanders, formerly a sergeant, Company F, Thirtieth Infantry, United States Army, American Expeditionary Forces, for bravery in action near Cunel, France, October 10, 1918; for gallantry in action near Jaulgonne, France, July 26, 1918, to be reviewed by the War Department to determine whether or not the award of a Congressional Medal of Honor in lieu of the Distinguished Service Cross should be made, and if it is found that the Congressional Medal of Honor should be awarded then such award is hereby authorized.'

"Pleas Sanders enlisted on May 9, 1917, at Bowling Green, Ky., served overseas from April 2, 1918, until April 15, 1919, and was honorably discharged from the Army on April 28, 1919, a sergeant.

"He received the Purple Heart decoration on account of a wound received in action on October 10, 1918. Under Citation Orders, No. 4, General Headquarters, American Expeditionary Forces, France, June 3, 1919, Sergeant Sanders was cited for gallantry in action and was held to be entitled to wear a Silver Star on the Victory Medal ribbon "for gallantry in action near Jaulgonne, France, July 26, 1918, and for his brilliant leadership of his platoon." Under General Orders, No. 32, War Department, Washington, March 1, 1919, Sergeant Sanders was awarded the Distinguished Service Cross; the order, issued by Gen. Peyton C. March, Chief of Staff, reading as follows:

" 'For extraordinary heroism in action near Cunel, France, October 10, 1918. He attacked an enemy strong point covered by machine-gun fire. Although severely wounded, he continued to direct his platoon from a shell hole until the objective was reached.'

"The Military Affairs Committee has gone into this case carefully; and in view of Sergeant Sanders' outstanding and heroic conduct in combat service, which is a matter of record, it is the opinion of the committee that he is entitled to have his case reviewed by the War Department with a view to ascertaining if a Congressional Medal of Honor should have been granted Sergeant Sanders in lieu of the Distinguished Service Cross. In the event it is found that the Congressional Medal of Honor should be awarded him, S. 4099, as amended, authorizes such an award to be made.

"Report of the War Department on S. 4099 follows:

"MARCH 9, 1936.

"Hon. MORRIS SHEPPARD,
"Chairman, Committee on Military Affairs,
"United States Senate.

"DEAR SENATOR SHEPPARD: Careful consideration has been given to the bill S. 4099, a bill to authorize the award of the Congressional Medal of Honor for distinguished service to Pleas Sanders, which your committee transmitted to the War Department on February 26, 1936, for a report and the views of the Department relative thereto.

"The applicable provision of existing law on this subject is contained in the act of Congress approved July 9, 1918 (40 Stat. 870–872), and reads in part as follows:

" '* * * The President is authorized to present, in the name of the Congress, a medal of honor only to each person who, while an officer or enlisted man of the Army, shall hereafter, in action involving actual conflict with an enemy, distinguish himself conspicuously by gallantry and intrepidity at the risk of his life above and beyond the call of duty.'

"The official records of the War Department show that Pleas Sanders (Army serial no. 546605) enlisted at Bowling Green, Ky., May 9, 1917; was assigned to Company F, Thirtieth Infantry, and served overseas from April 2, 1918, to April 15, 1919, and was honorably discharged at Camp Zachary Taylor, Ky., on April 28, 1919, a sergeant.

"The official records further show that Sergeant Sanders was awarded the Distinguished Service Cross for extraordinary heroism in action near Cunel, France, October 10, 1918; the Silver Star medal on account of his citation in Citation Order No. 4, General Headquarters, American Expeditionary Forces, 1919, for gallantry in action near Jaulgonne, France, July 26, 1918; and the Purple Heart decoration on account of wound received in action October 10, 1918.

"A careful search of the official records fails to show that a recommendation in behalf of Sergeant Sanders for the award of the Congressional Medal of Honor was ever received for consideration, either at General Headquarters, American Expeditionary Forces, or in the War Department.

"Under the regulations of the Department, a recommendation made by a commissioned officer setting forth the distinguished service or act, and accompanied by affidavits of eyewitnesses to the act performed, must have been submitted before consideration can be given any case with a view to the award of a decoration.

"To increase the measure of the reward for heroism by presenting the Medal of Honor through legislative action in cases of this kind would establish a very dangerous precedent, in view of the fact that more than 6,000 Distinguished Service Crosses were awarded for acts of heroism performed during the World War. Only 93 Medals of Honor (Army) have been awarded for acts of gallantry performed during the period of the World War, and all such awards were in strict accordance with the law governing the award of the Medal of Honor, the evidence in all cases being thoroughly investigated by a board of officers, whose recommendations were submitted for final action to the Commanding General, American Expeditionary Forces, or to the Secretary of War.

"It is the view of the War Department that, in general, awards of decorations should be confined to cases recommended by the agencies which have been established to administer the general laws providing for awards, and that awards by special legislation would be inadvisable and prejudicial to good administration of the general laws.

"For the above reasons the War Department does not favor the proposed bill.

"Sincerely yours,

"GEO. H. DERN, Secretary of War."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is hereby authorized to cause the evidence on which the award of the Distinguished Service Cross was made to Pleas Sanders, formerly a sergeant, Company F, Thirtieth Infantry, United States Army, American Expeditionary Forces, for bravery in action near Cunel, France, October 10, 1918; for gallantry in action near Jaulgonne, France, July 26, 1918, to be reviewed by the War Department to determine whether or not the award of a Congressional Medal of Honor in lieu of the Distinguished Service Cross should be made, and, if it is found that the Congressional Medal of Honor should be awarded, then such award is hereby authorized.

PURCHASE AND DISTRIBUTION OF FISHING INDUSTRY PRODUCTS

The bill (S. 1258) to authorize the purchase and distribution of products of the fishing industry was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 32 of the act entitled "An act to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes", approved August 24, 1935, as amended, is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following: "The powers under clause (2) of this section to encourage domestic consumption of commodities by diverting them from the normal channels of trade and commerce shall extend to fish (including shellfish) and the products thereof."

LICENSE TO DR. RALPH CHARLES STUART

The bill (S. 84) to provide for the issuance of a license to practice the healing art in the District of Columbia to Dr. Ralph Charles Stuart was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of that bill, providing for the issuance of a license to practice the healing art?

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, is that the bill having reference to Dr. Stuart?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; it releates to Dr. Ralph Charles Stuart.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, Dr. Stuart was admitted to practice medicine here in the District of Columbia, I think in 1921, or possibly in 1922. Along in 1929 an act was passed requiring a practitioner to take out an annual license. In the meantime, Dr. Stuart had gone to Maine. He was there admitted to practice, and his admission to practice was based upon the fact that he was a licensed practitioner here in the District of Columbia.

Mr. McKELLAR. Was he a medical doctor?

Mr. WHITE. Yes; a general practitioner.

Mr. McKELLAR. In the medical profession?

Mr. WHITE. Yes; in the medical profession. He did not know until sometime afterward, until the time in which to relicense had expired, that the act of 1929 had been passed. There have been a great many cases of special acts being passed by Congress in cases where practitioners found themselves in a similar predicament. The bill under consideration simply restores to him the right which he had as the result of his 1921 admission to practice. A great many acts of similar character to the one now under consideration have been passed.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I notice on the calendar that the next bill is probably the same kind of bill as the one we are now considering. I am wondering how far Congress is going in the matter of issuing individual licenses to practice medicine in the District of Columbia. If we are going to indulge in that kind of business, it seems to me it would lead to untold hardship.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maine yield to me?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Maine has stated the case substantially correctly. The facts, in brief, are these:

A law was enacted requiring practitioners who had been in the District of Columbia for years to take out a license. They had been licensed in the sense that they had conformed to all the requirements in the District for the purpose of practicing medicine. A number of doctors in high standing, doctors of high repute, were temporarily away from the District at the time. Some had gone to France for a little while; some had gone to Maine for a short period; but they were still, in the main, residents of the District of Columbia, and they were licensed here. That is to say, they had conformed to all the precedent steps necessary to be taken in order to practice their profession in the District of Columbia.

A number of them, when they came back to the District of Columbia, found that the new law had been passed, and it fixed the time limit within which to apply for taking out their licenses, and they found that they were excluded from practicing medicine. So in a number of cases, perhaps six or seven at the outside, the Commisisoners, after full investigation, recommended the issuance of licenses to those who had been practicing here in the District of Columbia, and whose standing was high.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator at that point?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Why does not the committee bring in a bill providing for a general rule? I think Senators can easily see that if Congress is going into the business of licensing individual persons to practice medicine, the Congress will not have time to do much else.

Mr. KING. That is a very proper question. The reason why such action was taken is that it was supposed that there would only be three or four or five doctors at the outside regarding whom such action would be necessary to be taken.

Mr. NORRIS. Is the law in the District of Columbia now such that a practicing physician must renew his license every year?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield to me?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. When this law went into effect, it excluded from its operations all practitioners who were then in practice in the District of Columbia. The law prescribed that not later than a certain date the practitioners who were then licensed must register with the Board of License. It so happened, as the Senator from Utah has said, that two or three really very eminent physicians——

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator quite got my point. I asked whether a law now exists providing that a practicing physician must renew his license every year.

Mr. COPELAND. No; that is not the case.

Mr. NORRIS. And the two bills now on the calendar are simply to take care of cases such as the Senator has described?

Mr. COPELAND. That is correct.

Mr. NORRIS. Of persons who did not know that they were required to take such action?

Mr. COPELAND. That is true. In my State there is a provision for annual registration, but that is not provided for in the District. The bill now under consideration and the one immediately following it on the calendar simply recognize practitioners who were practicing here in the District of Columbia and who are legitimate citizens of the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 84) to provide for the issuance of a license to practice the healing art in the District of Columbia to Dr. Ralph Charles Stuart was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding any limitation relating to the time within which an application for a license must be filed, the Commission on Licensure to Practice the Healing Art in the District of Columbia is hereby authorized and directed to issue a license to practice the healing art in the District of Columbia to Dr. Ralph Charles Stuart, of Sangerville, Maine, in accordance with the provisions of the first paragraph of section 24 of the Healing Arts Practice Act, District of Columbia, 1928.

DR. CLARENCE QUINTON PAIR

The bill (S. 989) to provide for the issuance of a license to practice the healing art in the District of Columbia to Dr. Clarence Quinton Pair was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, this measure is similar to the one which has just been passed, and I ask for its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding any limitation relating to the time within which an application for a license must be filed, the Commission of Licensure to Practice the Healing Art in the District of Columbia is authorized and directed to issue a license to practice the healing art in the District of Columbia to Dr. Clarence Q. Pair, Washington, D. C., in accordance with the provisions of the first paragraph of section 24 of the Healing Arts Practice Act, District of Columbia, 1928.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the calendar.

JURISDICTION AND POWER OF UNITED STATES COURTS

Mr. KING. Mr. President, history is replete with examples of oppression by executive or legislative authority, or both. Unsuccessful efforts were made during centuries of oppression to establish judicial tribunals with authority to guard the liberties of the people against the tyranny of executive and legislative branches of the government. Students of government have recognized the imperative necessity of an independent judiciary for the protection of the rights and liberties of individuals. Writers such as Montesquieu contended for a tripartite division of powers; they knew that courts had often been the creatures of autocratic power, and had acquiesced in the execution of policies injurious to the state and harmful to the liberties and rights of the people. Lord Coke, in Great Britain, struggled to emancipate the courts from the unlimited control of the Crown and the Parliament, and to give to them a dignity and authority which an independent judiciary must possess if the rights and liberties of the people are to be protected.

It is more important that an independent judiciary shall be maintained under our Federal system than in other forms of government. Ours is a dual form of government and the States must be preserved and they must not be robbed of their reserved powers. An independent Federal judiciary is vital if the rights of individuals and States are to be preserved and if the Federal Government shall be restrained within constitutional limits. In other countries where there have been judicial systems they have been attacked, if not destroyed, when plans were put in operation to interfere with the rights of individuals and to concentrate political authority in the hands of a limited number of persons, or of one person. Courts that have been free and independent have proven obstacles to the purposes and plans of groups or individuals who sought unrestricted power. We witness today the degredation of judicial authority in a number of countries and the control of judicial bodies by executive authority.

There are evidences of a movement in our own country which seeks to aggrandize the executive and legislative branches of the Government and to derogate from the authority given by the Constitution of the United States to the judicial branch of the Government.

It is believed by some that this movement to weaken, if not destroy, our dual form of government and to concentrate all governmental authority in the Federal Government, if unchecked, will menace this Republic.

There are some Americans who look to the Federal Government to control the policies of the States and to assume control of all governmental activities, local as well as national, and, in line with this policy, efforts are being made to weaken the courts and to strip them of authority conferred upon them by the Federal Constitution. When decisions are rendered by courts that do not meet the approval of some people, they criticize, and, indeed, often denounce, the courts, and they seek by various means to deprive them of their constitutional authority. In my opinion, if it were not for the courts standing as sentinels for the protection of individuals as well as States, and the Federal Government itself, the centripetal forces would assume such proportions as to jeopardize our form of government. State socialism is being advocated by some Americans, and, as I have stated, there are many who favor conferring upon the Federal Government power which is not granted to it in the Constitution of the United States.

I am submitting these preliminary observations before discussing a measure now before the Senate, introduced by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], which provides that—

> No district court or circuit court of appeals shall have jurisdiction of, and no district or circuit judge shall have jurisdiction or power to issue an injunction in, any suit in which it is sought to enjoin, suspend, or restrain the enforcement, operation, or execution of any act of Congress unless and until such act shall have been held finally invalid by the Supreme Court.

I am opposed to this measure, believing that it is not in harmony with the letter and spirit of the Constitution of the United States, and that if enacted into law would prove injurious to the American people.

This measure may be construed as a part of a movement to strip the Federal courts of their power to pass upon the constitutionality of statutes and is in its ultimate consequence a movement to change our Government to one of parliamentary supremacy, wherein any statute passed by the Congress is law without respect to constitutional limitations placed by the people upon the Congress. Certainly, so far as the Supreme Court of the United States is concerned, it would seem that no such drastic withdrawal of judicial power from it and no such change to a parliamentary form of government either ought to be or could be accomplished except through the people by constitutional amendment; and if the judicial power granted the inferior Federal courts is identical with that granted the Supreme Court of the United States, the same would seem to be true with respect to depriving by statute, as distinguished from constitutional amendment, the inferior courts of power to pass upon the constitutionality of statutes. In civilized countries there must be courts competent to protect individual and property rights and to restrain other branches of the Government within prescribed limits. Courts of equity are as much a part of a sound and rational judicial system as are courts which are confined within what is often spoken of as common-law jurisdiction. The Constitution of the United States provides a complete judicial system, consisting of the Supreme Court and inferior courts, and these courts are endowed with complete judicial power.

It is contended by some that district or circuit courts of appeals are mere statutory courts and that judges of these courts are in effect "our employees" and should be restrained from questioning acts of Congress.

I do not concur in this view. It is true that under the Constitution Congress is given the authority and the right to confer jurisdiction upon the inferior courts and that such jurisdiction is conferred with such limitations and exceptions as the Congress may prescribe. But this does not mean that such courts are "statutory courts" or that their judges are "our employees."

The Supreme Court in a number of instances has held that these inferior courts are constitutional courts, that their judges hold their offices during good behavior, and that their salaries cannot by the express terms of the Constitution be diminished during their term of office.

That is very important in the light of the attacks which are now being made in various parts of the United States upon the Supreme Court, upon its jurisdiction, and upon its constitutional functions.

The Supreme Court, in the case of O'Donohue v. The United States (289 U. S. 531), stated that—

> • • • The anxiety of the framers of the Constitution to preserve the independence especially of the judicial department is manifested by the provision now under review, forbidding the diminution of the compensation of the judges of courts exercising the judicial power of the United States. This requirement was foreshadowed, and its vital character attested, by the Declaration of Independence, which, among the injuries and usurpations recited against the King of Great Britain, declared that he had "made judges dependent on his will alone, for the tenure of their offices, and the payment of their salaries • • •."

The cases of Evans v. Gore (253 U. S. 245) and Booth v. U. S. (291 U. S. 339) give support to the views expressed in the O'Donohue case.

As indicative of the fact that the judges of inferior courts are not "our employees", who should do the bidding of Congress or the Executive, but are members of an independent branch, namely, the judiciary, I invite attention to the act of Congress of March 23, 1792, which made it the duty of the United States circuit courts to hear applications for pensions and to decide whether the applicants should be put on the pension list. The judges of the circuit court in the district of Pennsylvania on April 18, 1792, addressed a letter to the President, declining to proceed under the act. Justice Iredell, who was, as Senators know, one of the greatest of lawyers and judges of his day, and Justice Silgreave, district judges of North Carolina, sitting in circuit, also adopted the same view and addressed a letter to the President setting forth their position. On February 17, 1794, the question came before the Supreme Court in a case not reported at the time, but subsequently inserted by Mr. Justice Taney (U. S. v. Yale Todd, 13 How. 52). The opinion of all the judges was that this was not the exercise of a judicial power, and that under the Constitution they had authority only to exercise judicial powers and perform judicial functions. In fact, with the exception of the courts in the District of Columbia, which operate by virtue of special provisions of the Constitution relating to the District of Columbia, none of our inferior courts can perform functions other than those of a judicial character. It should be added that the Federal courts located in the District of Columbia are the only courts which have authority to deal with matters of a so-called administrative nature, and this only because in addition to their authority as constitutional courts exercising the judicial power of the United States under article III of the Constitution, they have, unlike the other Federal courts, also powers arising under the authority of Congress to legislate in respect of Territories and the seat of government.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator has referred to a claim being made by some, at least, that the judges of the inferior courts are "our employees." I do not recall anyone who has so claimed, and I do not think any student of the subject would claim that we could impose on such judges any duty that was not judicial. As a matter of fact, the Senator will not claim, will he, that we could not take any or all of the jurisdiction away from any court except the Supreme Court?

Mr. KING. I agree with the Senator that the judges referred to are not our "employees", but they were so designated by a distinguished Senator, who stated "that we ought to limit and restrict the rights of one of our 'employees', so to speak, because the Federal circuit and district judges are in a sense the employees of Congress and of the President, to declare acts of Congress invalid and void until after the Supreme Court has passed on the matter."

My contention is that when the so-called inferior courts were organized, they were endowed with judicial power of which they may not be deprived. By that I mean that all judicial power was granted to the Supreme Court and the inferior courts, and that any attempt to deny them the authority to exercise full judicial power would, in effect, be a violation of the Constitution and a denial to the people of rights, privileges, and benefits to which they were entitled. The inferior courts are courts of the United States and have full equity power to deal with questions and matters brought within their cognizance.

Mr. NORRIS. Then, the Senator is of the opinion that Congress cannot take away any of the jurisdiction that has been given, for instance, to the United States district courts by statute?

Mr. KING. The Senator possibly confuses—or I may not have understood him—jurisdiction and judicial power.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, no. I concede that they are judges and that Congress could not give them authority that was not in its nature judicial; they get their authority originally from the Constitution; but it is not imposed on them until Congress passes the requisite act. The Congress, as I understand—and I supposed that was the undisputed rule—may take that jurisdiction away at any time it wants to do so.

That is not, however, claiming that Congress could impose upon them a duty that was not in its nature judicial. Congress could give them any jurisdiction, providing it did not exceed the constitutional limits, or take any part of it away any time it wanted to do so.

Mr. KING. My contention is that they are constitutional courts; when they were created, they were endowed with judicial power, including the power to issue injunctions; that no legislation may be enacted by Congress that would deprive the inferior courts of judicial power; and if we should abolish one court—and there may be some doubt as to whether we could—there must be another that would be endowed with the judicial power. We may not, in other words, deprive the people of the United States of courts in which judicial power may be exercised.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. May I suggest to the Senator that jurisdiction is one thing and judicial power is a different thing?

Mr. KING. I have just so stated.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Utah does not contend, does he, that the Congress cannot limit the jurisdiction of the inferior courts?

Mr. KING. My contention is that if Congress should limit their jurisdiction it could not deprive them of equitable power; in other words, all judicial power, under my view, must exist in the Federal courts, and that means, of course, power to grant equitable relief, including injunctive relief in proper cases. Congress might distribute the judicial power among a number of courts, but my contention is that it must exist in its fullness in some or all of the courts provided under the Constitution.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me suggest to the Senator——

Mr. KING. If the Senator will permit me to develop my thesis, I think he will more clearly understand my position.

Mr. CONNALLY. I have been listening to the Senator, and that is the reason I want to challenge some of the statements I think he has made. The Senator knows that in the Constitution there is no court mentioned except the Supreme Court.

Mr. KING. And "such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish." And when Congress creates and establishes them, they are endowed with judicial power, including the power of issuing injunctions.

Mr. CONNALLY. They are endowed with judicial power over matters which Congress commits to them, and no more.

Mr. NORRIS. That is correct.

Mr. CONNALLY. Within the jurisdiction that Congress establishes for them, they have full and complete judicial power; but in setting up a court the creator, which is Congress, may limit the jurisdiction and say, "You may not decide anything except admiralty cases", for instance, or criminal cases, or "you may only consider misdemeanors", or "you may consider felonies"; and when a court's jurisdiction is limited it may not exercise any judicial power except on those subject matters and to the extent that the Congress has provided.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am willing to yield for questions, but, learned as my friend is, I should like to proceed with my remarks.

Mr. CONNALLY. I beg the Senator's pardon. I will be very glad to have my suggestions expunged from the RECORD.

Mr. KING. No; they are so illuminating that I want them in the RECORD.

Mr. President, the Constitution specifically provides that—> the judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish.

After these courts are established the judicial power extends, by the terms of the Constitution—> to all cases, in law and equity, arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority—

And so forth. It extends not only to cases in law but also cases in equity. The injunction is a fundamental part of the equity power of a court. These powers, in the case of inferior courts, are derived from article III, section 2, of the Constitution. The jurisprudence of the High Court of Chancery in England furnishes the chancery law applicable to Federal courts sitting in equity.

This may be said to be the common law of chancery, and since the organization of the Government, it has been recognized and observed (Wheeling v. Belmont Bridge Co., 13 How. 518–563).

Mr. Zechariah Chafee, Jr., in an article on Injunction, which appears in the Encyclopaedia of Social Sciences, states that injunctions originated in the English court of chancery and that requests for injunction by litigants indicate that they were granted as early as the year 1400. Lawyers are familiar with the controversy between Lord Coke and Ellesmere growing out of the action of the equity courts enjoining proceedings in the common law courts. Under the rules of equity as they were formulated and carried into effect, if there were conflicts between them and the common law, an injunction enabled courts of equity to prevail.

In England, as well as the United States, at an early date there was a consolidation of legal and equitable powers in the same courts, and the equity powers of the courts were constantly invoked for the benefit of the people and to protect them in many cases against some of the harsh and inequitable provisions of the common law. I might add that some writers have contended that there was a resemblance between the Roman law "Interdict" and the injunctive processes of the courts of equity. At any rate there is much to support the proposition that, notwithstanding the antiquity of the origin of courts of equity in Great Britain, under the Roman law, at a much earlier date, equitable relief was granted litigants which was akin to that later granted and still granted by courts of equity.

The early chancellors were bound by most rigid and settled procedure and the subsequent history of the injunction is bound up with and constitutes a part of the general history of equity.

As the equitable jurisdiction of chancery was extended to new fields, the scope of the injunction necessarily widened, and it was recognized as one of the most effective and powerful instrumentalities for carrying into effect the chancellor's determination of the rights of the litigants. It would seem, therefore, that injunction is one of the essential and, indeed, indispensable attributes of judicial power.

Mr. Justice Story, in the case of Martin v. Hunter's Lessee (1 Wheaton, 326–328), pointed out that it is the duty of the Congress to vest the whole judicial power of the United States in some court of the United States. This language is employed by this great Judge:

> The first section of the third article declares, "the judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court, and in such other inferior courts as the Congress may, from time to time, ordain and establish." The second section declares that "the judicial power shall extend to all cases in law or equity, arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States, and the treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority; to all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls; to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction; to controversies to which the United States shall be a party; to controversies between two or more States; between a State and citizens of another State; between citizens of different States; between citizens of the same State, claiming lands under the grants of different States; and between a State, or the citizens thereof, and foreign states, citizens, or subjects." It then proceeds to declare, that "in all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, and those in which a State shall be a party, the Supreme Court shall have original jurisdiction. In all the other cases before mentioned, the Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction, both as to law and fact, with such exceptions, and under such regulations, as the Congress shall make.

He discussed this point at considerable length and demonstrated that all judicial power, as it was understood and as it existed at the time the Constitution of the United States was formed, must be lodged in judicial tribunals; and the tribunals provided by the Constitution were the Supreme Court and the inferior courts.

The Justice then states that the article creating and defining the judicial power of the United States is "the voice of the whole American people solemnly declared, in establishing one great department of that Government which was, in many respects national, and in all, supreme." He further declared:

> The language of the article throughout is manifestly designed to be mandatory upon the legislature. Its obligatory force is so imperative the Congress could not, without a violation of its duty, have refused to carry it into operation. The judicial power of the United States shall be vested (not may be vested) in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as Congress may, from time to time, ordain and establish. Could Congress have lawfully refused to create a supreme court, or to vest in it the constitutional jurisdiction? "The judges, both of the supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their offices during good behavior and shall, at stated times, receive, for their services, a compensation which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office." Could Congress create or limit any other tenure of the judicial office? Could they refuse to pay, at stated times, the stipulated salary, or diminish it during the continuance in office? But one answer can be given to these questions; it must be in the negative. The object of the Constitution was to establish three great departments of government; the legislative, the executive, and the judicial departments. Without the latter it would be impossible to carry into effect some of the express provisions of the Constitution. The judicial power must therefore be vested in some court by Congress; and to suppose that it was not an obligation binding on them, but might, at their pleasure, be omitted or declined, is to suppose that, under the sanction of the Constitution, they might defeat the Constitution itself; a construction which would lead to such a result cannot be sound.
> If, then, it is the duty of Congress to vest the judicial power of the United States, it is a duty to vest the whole judicial power. The language, if imperative as to one part, is imperative as to all. If it were otherwise, this anomaly would exist, that Congress might successively refuse to vest the jurisdiction in any one class of cases enumerated in the Constitution, and thereby defeat the jurisdiction as to all; for the Constitution has not singled out any class on which Congress are bound to act in preference to others.

It is further declared in the opinion:

> It would seem, therefore, to follow that Congress are bound to create some inferior courts, in which to vest all that jurisdiction which, under the Constitution, is exclusively vested in the United States, and of which the Supreme Court cannot take original cognizance. They might establish one or more inferior courts; they might parcel out the jurisdiction among such courts, from time to time, at their own pleasure. But the whole judicial power of the United States should be, at all times, vested, either in an original or appellate form, in some courts created under its authority.

If injunction is a part of the judicial power of the Federal Government, then it is the duty of Congress to vest this power in some Federal court. Perhaps one inferior court may from time to time be substituted for another, but the whole judicial power muse be vested in some inferior court and in the Supreme Court.

The bill before the Senate, offered by the Senator from Tennessee, does not do this; indeed, it takes away from any district or circuit court the right to issue injunctions in any suit in which it is sought to enjoin, suspend, or restrain the enforcement, operation, or execution of any act of Congress. This power does not reside in the Supreme Court, as it possesses only such jurisdiction as is conferred by the Constitution.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The wording of the bill is not as the Senator states it. It says "until the Supreme Court has passed" upon it. In other words, it would merely delay the application of the injunction until the Supreme Court has declared the law invalid.

Mr. KING. As I interpret the bill, it is a substantial denial of the injunctive power in all its authority.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no. It is a limitation upon the injunctive power. It amounts to a supersedeas.

Mr. KING. I repeat, all judicial power under the Constitution must be lodged in the Supreme Court and in the inferior courts, which inferior courts having been established, judicial power follows, and that power includes the right to issue injunctions without the restraints which are sought to be imposed by the bill introduced by the Senator from Tennessee. Therefore, if it is taken away, this judicial power will not reside in any Federal court, thus defeating the constitutional mandate.

This view is supported by Justice Hughes in his book published in 1928, on page 24, in which he says:

> For, while the Constitution vests the judicial power of the United States in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as shall be established by the Congress, and judicial power cannot be placed elsewhere, still with respect to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court it is only the original jurisdiction that is completely safeguarded by the Constitution."

It is recognized that State courts may in the exercise of their ordinary, original, and rightful jurisdiction incidentally take cognizance of cases arising under the Constitution, the laws and treaties of the United States and to all these cases the judicial power of the United States does extend by means of its appellate jurisdiction. For this reason it might be argued that the judicial power in original or appellate form is vested in some court of the United States, but this conclusion does not remove the objection of a denial of the power to issue an injunction. The whole effect of the injunctive power is to provide immediate relief from irreparable damage to persons or property. Of course, the irreparable damage might have already taken place by the time the case reaches the Supreme Court of the United States in the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction.

Furthermore, it must be recognized that the State courts have no authority to issue injunctions to restrain Federal officers from the execution of their duties under the laws of the United States, even though a different rule applies in the case of State officers enforcing a State law which violates the Federal Constitution: Cavanaugh v. Looney (248 U. S. 453). See Pomeroy, Equity Jurisprudence (4th ed., sec. 1747).

As authority for this statement Pomeroy cites the case of In re Turner (119 F. 235). In that case the State court had issued an injunction restraining Major Turner, an Army officer acting in obedience of a command by the Secretary of War, pursuant to an act of Congress, from laying a sewer pipe from a United States Army post in Iowa to what is called the North River. In April 1900, Congress passed a statute for the erection of a military post at Des Moines, Iowa. Under this statute the site selected was about 5 miles south of Des Moines, and the sewer in question extended from the site to the North River, a distance of about 2 miles. The State court issued an injunction enjoining the defendant from constructing any part of the sewer in Warren County. On the ground that a Federal question was involved, the case was removed to the district court. In holding that the State court had no authority to issue the injunction in such a case, the Federal court said:

> Next, as to the injunction case in the circuit court. It is claimed that the amount in controversy does not exceed $2,000. But it is the value of the land, and not of the use, that is decisive of this question. That there is a Federal question involved cannot be in doubt. It appears from the face of the petition, filed in the State court, that defendants were executing an act of Congress, and complainant says, in effect and meaning, that the statute is being executed in an unauthorized and unlawful manner, because of that provision of the Constitution which declares, "nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation." (Constitutional amendment, article 5.) So that in this case we have not only a Federal statute involved, under which defendants are acting, but we have a provision of the Federal Constitution which defendants are charged by plaintiff, the landowner, with violating; and this all because, not that defendants are taking plaintiff's property for the Government, but that by laying the sewer they are depreciating the value of his property. And whether this is a taking within the meaning of the Constitution I make no ruling. That question is not yet reached. But complainant asserts the proposition, and defendants deny it. Surely we have a Federal question. But that cannot be tried on injunction issued by a State court.
> The injunction was improvidently issued, and should be set aside, and the order is accordingly made; and, regardless of the citizenship of the parties, a Federal question being involved, and the amount in controversy being sufficient, the case was properly removed to this court by order of the State court, and the motion to remand is overruled.

In Abeleman v. Booth (21 How. 506) a warrant for Booth's commitment was made by the United States commission for having aided and abetted in the escape of a fugitive slave from the custody of a United States marshal in violation of the fugitive slave law of September 18, 1850. The State judge on habeas corpus released Booth and his decision was affirmed by the Supreme Court of Wisconsin on the ground that the fugitive slave law was unconstitutional. The Supreme Court of the United States reversed the judgment of the State court on the ground that the State had no jurisdiction of the prisoner. The same rule was applied in McClung v. Silliman (6 Wheat. 598), in which the Supreme Court held that the State court could not issue a mandamus to the Register of the Land Office of the United States in Ohio commanding him to issue a final certificate of purchase to the plaintiff for certain lands in that State to which the plaintiff claimed under the laws of the United States. In that case it was held that the officers of the United States, employed in disposing of the lands of the United States, can only be controlled by the power that created them, and that no such power to issue a mandamus resulted to the State courts. The reason for such a rule is well expressed in In re Neagle (135 U. S. 62), in which the Court pointed out that while the case could be brought into the United States court for review, the officer is withdrawn from the discharge of his duty during the pendency of the proceedings and the exercise of Federal power arrested.

But even assuming for the sake of argument that the State court having acquired jurisdiction of a case could issue an injunction to restrain the operation of a Federal statute it does not follow that in all cases the litigant would be granted injunctive relief. The authorities are unanimous in stating that an injunction is an action in personam, and that to make it effective the court must have jurisdiction over the person. If a Federal officer acting under a Federal statute was about to commit irreparable injury to the property of a resident of the State of Maryland situated in the District of Columbia, the Maryland resident would not be entitled to equitable relief from his State court because the State court would have no jurisdiction to restrain the acts of an officer of the United States performed outside of the State. The litigant could not go into courts of the District of Columbia and request relief for such courts are inferior courts of the United States within the contemplation of the McKellar bill, and therefore could not afford him any relief.

The bill under consideration confuses the distinction recognized by the Constitution between jurisdiction and judicial power. Jurisdiction refers to cases or persons over which the court is to have cognizance, and judicial power refers to the means given to the court to exercise its jurisdiction. The mere fact that the measure refers to the jurisdiction of the district and circuit courts of appeals does not make it a matter of jurisdiction. What the bill really does, or attempts to do, is to interfere with the judicial power of the court. It does not take away from the court its power to take cognizance of the cases and persons affected, but strikes at the inherent power of the court to issue injunctions where a statute of the United States is involved. It is not a legitimate use of the power given to Congress to regulate the jurisdiction of Federal courts, but an unlawful attempt to make inoperative an inherent judicial power vested in the courts of the United States under the Constitution.

The effect of the measure would be to deny a citizen injunctive relief even to prevent irreparable injury to his life, liberty, or property under the fifth amendment.

Suppose litigants believe an act of Congress is unconstitutional and can show that, if put into effect, irreparable damage will result; are they entitled to no relief? Should not the injured person be entitled to present to the nearest Federal court his plea for relief? Should the judicial power of the Federal court to issue injunctions be taken away from it because the court is asked to invoke its power to exercise its authority to determine whether an act of Congress is constitutional?

It has been stated by some that while they recognize the right of the Supreme Court to declare acts of Congress unconstitutional they deny that this power exists in our Federal courts, but the Federal courts are as much a part of our judicial branch as is the Supreme Court. It is a fact that Federal courts were the first to declare acts in conflict with the Constitution invalid following their establishment under the judiciary acts, and it is well known that State courts before the creation of the Federal courts declared acts unconstitutional. There were decisions by our Federal circuit courts in 1791–93 holding State laws invalid when in conflict with the Federal Constitution.

In the reported case of Van Horne's Lessee v. Dorrance (2 Dall. 304), reported in 1795, Mr. Justice Patterson, at circuit, held an act passed by the Legislature of Pennsylvania invalid as impairing the obligations of a contract. This language of the able justice is worthy of consideration:

> I take it to be a clear position that if a legislative act oppugns a constitutional principle, the former must give way and be rejected on the force of repugnance. I hold it to be a position equally clear and sound that in such case it will be the duty of the court to adhere to the Constitution and to declare the act null and void.

This decision was rendered 6 years before John Marshall's appointment to the Supreme Bench.

Mr. Justice Chase was a little more hesitant in 1796, as shown in the case of Hylton v. United States (3 Dall. 171), but in 1800, after he had thoroughly considered the question in the case of United States v. Callander (25 Fed. Cas. 239), he asserted the doctrine as strongly as did Judge Patterson. Since that time, and even before, Federal courts have not hesitated to hold acts of Congress unconstitutional which they believed to be in conflict with the Federal Constitution. This is a fundamental part of their judicial power, and since they have taken an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, it is not only their right, but it is their duty, to exercise this power. Moreover, unless the constitutional question is raised in the inferior courts it will not be considered by the Supreme Court on review.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MALONEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator says that this is a fundamental right given the courts in the Constitution. Will the Senator point out a single line or even word in the Constitution that gives in terms to the Supreme Court or any other court the right to declare an act of Congress unconstitutional?

Mr. KING. The Senator asked a similar question when I was discussing, nearly a year ago, the authority of the Supreme Court to declare acts of Congress invalid. He stated then, as I recall, that the origin of the view that the courts might declare acts unconstitutional was found in John Marshall's decision in the Marbury case. I pointed out then that the view announced by Marshall obtained before the Constitution was formed, and that it was entertained by the members of the Constitutional Convention.

Mr. McKELLAR. But that is not the question I am asking. Here is the Constitution right before me. Is there a line in the Constitution that gives the express power to the Supreme Court or any other court to declare an act of Congress unconstitutional?

Mr. KING. The Constitution, which is the supreme law of the land, provides that one of the three coordinate branches of the Government was the judiciary, and also declares in substance that all judicial power of the United States shall be vested in the Supreme Court and such inferior courts as the Congress might ordain and establish. Certainly the judiciary, recognized by all as a vital part of the Federal Government, was not a shadowy form but a vital living organism. The fathers of the Republic knew what judicial power was—they knew that it comprised authority to declare acts unconstitutional, and when they vested all judicial power in the judiciary, that necessarily meant the authority to pass upon the validity of acts of Congress. The members of the Constitutional Convention knew that controversies would arise over interpretations of the Constitution. They knew that the States might differ in the interpretations placed by their courts upon treaties and laws of Congress, and that unless there were some judicial body with authority to reconcile these different views and to determine whether acts were valid or invalid a chaotic condition would result.

Mr. McKELLAR. But surely the Senator will admit there is not an express word or line, or even thought, to that effect stated in the Constitution itself?

Mr. KING. I do not agree with the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. I invite the Senator to show where it is so provided in the Constitution.

Mr. KING. I invite attention to the statement which I made on a previous occasion when I discussed the question and cited numerous authorities holding the right of the Supreme Court to challenge the constitutionality of an act of Congress, and I also repeat what is stated in section 1 of article III of the Constitution.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. KING. I do.

Mr. ASHURST. I had resolved not to enter this debate, because the able Senator from Utah has a philosophy of his own which he is expounding in a very learned way.

Mr. KING. Not my own, but the philosophy of many.

Mr. ASHURST. And after nearly a score of years of service with the able Senator on the Senate Committee on the Judiciary I have learned to have great respect for his erudition and knowledge of the law.

If the Senator will permit me, it must have been 2 weeks ago or more that the able Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] introduced a bill which I construed to limit not the judicial power of any judge but the jurisdiction.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is true.

Mr. ASHURST. Several Senators today have pointed out the difference between judicial power and jurisdiction. Congress has no authority or power to interfere with the judicial power; but, as I conceive it, we may interpret or change or modify the jurisdiction—not the judicial power—of the inferior courts; that is, the circuit and the district courts.

Mr. KING. I do not differ with the Senator in stating that there is a difference between jurisdiction and judicial power; but, as I have indicated, all judicial power must be invested in some courts, and the Senator knows that under the Constitution of the United States, if inferior courts do not have injunctive power, there is no way by which immediate relief from irreparable damage or injury can be secured as the original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court is limited.

Mr. ASHURST. I am supporting the Senator thus far, if the Senator will permit an interruption. Will the Senator permit it?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. ASHURST. Whilst I agree that the bill introduced by the able Senator from Tennessee is not at all unconstitutional, and there are many precedents for it, I wish to disagree with the view of the able Senator from Tennessee and agree with the view of the Senator from Utah that there is in the Constitution a mandate upon the judges to declare laws invalid where we have transcended our power.

The able Senator from Tennessee in a most respectful way issued a challenge to anyone to say where the Constitution declares that the Supreme Court has power to declare laws unconstitutional. The Senator from Tennessee is a student of the Constitution. All I need to do is to read this part of article VI:

> This Constitution and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof and all treaties made or which shall be made under the authority of the United States shall be the supreme law of the land.

By a force of reasoning which no one can escape, with the judicial power reposed in the courts under the Constitution, and with the Constitution made the supreme law of the land, it is the duty of the courts, if they are honest men, when an unconstitutional act comes before them, to say so.

Mr. KING. I have just stated that they have not only the power but the duty to say so.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator has stated it more ably than I could; but in view of a controversy of a sharp nature going on throughout the country, I thought it might be enlightening to say, if the Senator will permit me further, that no man in this body at this time, or who has served heretofore, has ever more inveterately pointed out the right and power of the courts to declare laws unconstitutional; and, so far as I know, no measure would have a conjectural possibility of becoming a law which would seek to deprive the courts of their right and power to declare laws unconstitutional.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield——

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to say that as the Constitution is now being applied, certainly after long acquiescence by the country, I think the Supreme Court now has the power to declare an act unconstitutional; but certainly that power was not given to the Supreme Court by the Constitution itself. I think it ought to have been given to the Supreme Court by the Constitution itself. It ought to have been given to that Court, and it ought not to have been exercised by the Supreme Court and other courts generally, like the district courts and the circuit courts.

Why, Mr. President, just a year or two ago the Board of Tax Appeals—not even a court, but a board of tax appeals—deliberately declared, in a published opinion, that an act of Congress was unconstitutional! It will not be long before we shall find justices of the peace throughout the country declaring acts of Congress unconstitutional, and all brought about by the failure, perhaps, of our founding forefathers to put into the Constitution an express provision for declaring acts unconstitutional.

I think the Constitution ought to do it. I think there ought to be a tribunal to pass upon acts of Congress. The Supreme Court has amended the Constitution of the United States by assuming that power, and the country has agreed to it; and I agree with the Senator from Arizona that no bill would get anywhere to take away from the Supreme Court that power which they have assumed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the provision of the Constitution just read by the Senator from Arizona is a command to every court to pass upon the constitutionality of acts of Congress brought to its attention in a proper case, and if such acts transcend the authority of Congress, to hold them invalid. As indicative of the intention of the founders of the Republic with respect to the authority of the courts to pass upon the validity of legislative enactments I call attention to the fact that within a few months after the adoption of the Constitution, when there were 25 Members of the House and of the Senate in the Congress who had been members of the Constitutional Convention, the Judiciary Act became a law. Under that act the Federal and State courts were authorized to pass upon the validity of laws and treaties. There was, thus, an interpretation placed upon the Constitution a number of years before John Marshall's decision in the Marbury case, and that interpretation was that the validity of legislation might be determined by the courts.

Sometime ago I examined the constitutions of the 48 States and my recollection is that in each of them the judicial power was conferred in language substantially the same as that found in the Constitution of the United States. There were no express provisions authorizing the courts of the various States to declare acts to be unconstitutional, but the judicial tribunal of the States have held without challenge that they had the right to pass upon the constitutionality of legislative enactments of their respective States. I have made some investigation and find that literally hundreds of State laws have been declared unconstitutional by the courts of the States. The people of the United States from the beginning of our Government recognized the authority and the duty of courts to hold invalid measures that were violative of the Federal and State constitutions. Many of the States and the Colonies before the States were organized held invalid legislative enactments. In the various colonial governments measures adopted by colonial councils were declared by the Privy Council of Great Britain to be unauthorized and therefore invalid. My recollection is that the Colonies and the States before the Constitution was adopted attempted to assimilate to their so-called legislative proceedings the doctrine announced by Lord Coke in his contention that Parliament was not omnipotent.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. KING. I do.

Mr. BLACK. I desire to ask a question with reference to the Senator's statement, as I understood him, that hundreds of laws had been held unconstitutional before the Constitution was adopted.

Mr. KING. No; I said many State laws. Take the Singleton case, in North Carolina, and a number of cases in New Jersey and in the New England States.

Mr. BLACK. I may state to the Senator that I do not claim to have explored the subject completely, but I have read all I could find on it up to this time. I find only seven instances in which such a thing was done, and in each instance the action of the court was met with decided and vigorous protest. In the case in Rhode Island, to which the Senator refers, the judges were summoned before the legislature; and in the case in North Carolina, to which he refers, a member of the Constitutional Convention from that State—the Governor—immediately repudiated the action. On investigation I could find only seven instances in which the power had ever been even remotely asserted up to that time.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator undoubtedly has been diligent in his examination; but my recollection is that there were other cases than those referred to by the Senator in which legislative enactments were held to be invalid, and I am sure there were a large number of measures adopted or enacted by the Colonies before the States were organized which were declared to be invalid by the Privy Council of Great Britain, which stood in the light of an appellate or supreme court. A short time ago I prepared a memorandum discussing this matter, and I recall that Mr. Charles Warren, in his excellent book, Congress, the Constitution, and the Supreme Court, states in substance that colonial acts, as well as the laws of a number of States before the Constitution was adopted, had been held to be invalid. I do not have the memorandum here, but I ask permission to insert in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks excerpts from the same.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BLACK. I will simply state to the Senator that, instead of the statement of Warren——

Mr. KING. And others, I said.

Mr. BLACK. If he will do so, I will ask him to put in the RECORD the list of cases, because I have endeavored to find them; and while I find several statements to the effect that there had been such instances, I find that those who have made careful and painstaking study take issue on that point. No one has ever been able to find more than seven such cases, and as to four of those circumstantial proof indicates that they cannot properly fall in such a category, and in the other three there was very vigorous protest, and a meeting was held in New York by the Clintonians vigorously condemning it.

I am not saying this with any idea of getting into an argument or controversy about the matter, because I hope the Senator does have the list, and I shall be glad to see it placed in the RECORD.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have been diverted by the interruptions of Senators from the subject which I was discussing, namely, the bill introduced by the Senator from Tennessee, relating to the equitable power of Federal district and circuit courts of appeal. However, I will submit just a few words by way of reply to the Senator from Alabama. There was a controversy between Coke and Lord Ellesmere, with which the Senator is undoubtedly familiar, in which the former asserted the right of the British courts to pass upon parliamentary acts, as well as the acts of the King. The colonists challenged various acts of Parliament, contending that the same were violative of the charters of the Colonies, as well as the rights of the colonists under the spirit of the British unwritten constitution. The Declaration of Independence, as well as the pleas of Otis and Samuel Adams and others, clearly indicate that they believed that legislative enactments or orders of the King might be attacked when they violated the rights of the colonists.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield in connection with his statement that I am familiar with the statement about Lord Coke? I wish to interject a remark, if he will permit.

I am reasonably familiar with the controversy, but, in my judgment, the dictum of Lord Coke in the case to which the Senator refers was never accepted, but was expressly and vehemently repudiated. In addition to that, instead of the tyranny of the King being imposed over the courts, in my reading of history I reached the conclusion that it was a combination of the judges with the King that brought about the protest of the people, on account of the judges supporting the King and usurping the legislative right of the people, and that the Parliament——

Mr. KING. I do not yield for a speech.

Mr. BLACK. I am not trying to make a speech.

Mr. KING. I think it is a speech. I will ask the Senator to please conclude.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator made a speech stating that I was familiar with the history of the controversy, and my familiarity with the history is such that it leads me to believe that it was the combination of the judges acting with the King, when, by a 5-to-4 opinion, the judges held the ship money law to be constitutionally a prerogative of the King, which brought on the Revolution, and the King lost in that very heavily.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, there was a struggle for several centuries in Great Britain between the Crown and the Parliament and the liberal forces who were seeking a larger degree of liberty and a wider field for social and political development. At times the liberal movement manifested itself in a demand for judicial review of legislative and executive acts, and Lord Coke and others, believing that the rights of British subjects, not only in Great Britain but in the New World, were being infringed upon, challenged the supremacy of the Parliament and the unlimited authority of the King. It is also true that many of the laws of the Colonies were held invalid during the period prior to the adoption of the Federal Constitution. My recollection is that Professor Dickinson, in his work, the American Colonial Government, states, in substance, that during the period from 1696 to 1765, approximately 400 different laws from the continental American Colonies alone were disallowed or held to be invalid.

The Privy Council was in effect the final judicial tribunal to pass upon the laws passed by the American Colonies which were disallowed. The Colonies understood that the mother country regarded their legislative bodies as possessing limited authority; and they understood that their laws might be disallowed by the Privy Council. There were cases in which the judgments of colonial courts were set aside merely because of the conflict of law on which they rested, with higher fundamental provisions contained in the instrument by which the colony was founded.

Mr. Meigs, in his work entitled "The American Doctrine of Judicial Power", states that—

> In more than half of the States the doctrine of judicial review had received distinct recognition from leading public men.

And he adds, as I recall, that—

> The evidence is overwhelming that the American doctrine of judicial power originated in no usurpation, but was precisely one of those gradual and well-nigh inevitable growths that formed so great a part of the basis of the governmental system of the Anglo-Saxon people.

In the memorandum to which I have referred I shall direct attention to various writers supporting the position which I have taken, that in the colonial days, and after the States were organized, legislative acts were declared invalid.

Mr. President, I now return to a discussion of the subject to which I first addressed myself. I shall attempt to show that if the so-called inferior courts were denied the power to grant injunctions no relief would be possible. My recollection is that the Supreme Court has repeatedly refused to consider law questions not raised in the lower courts; but under the bill to which I have referred, if they exercise this power, they cannot exercise their judicial power to issue an injunction to prevent irreparable injury to the litigant while the matter is on appeal. Not only is jurisdiction taken away from the court to issue an injunction in case the court holds the statute invalid, but even in those cases where the court construes the statute as not to cover the litigant's case. It might be that the Congress did not intend the litigant's case to be covered by the Federal statute, but due to an erroneous and technical construction of the statute by the executive department the litigant is brought in. Even in such cases the inferior court loses the right to grant an injunction to prevent irreparable injury. I inquire if this is not an arbitrary and unreasonable abuse on the part of Congress of its power to regulate the jurisdiction of inferior courts. Can it be said that Congress was granted this power to nullify other rights and powers or guaranties granted by the Constitution? I think not.

Congress has power to enact laws on the subject of bankruptcy, but it cannot exercise that power so as to deprive persons of property without due process of law (Louisville Joint Stock Land Bank v. Radford (295 U. S. 555)). Congress has the power to levy taxes, but it cannot use that power to take over functions reserved to the States or to the people under the tenth amendment (United States v. Butler (297 U. S. 1)).

It is a truism to state that Congress must use the powers granted to it under the Constitution in a legitimate manner. An example of an abuse of power has occurred in connection with the power of States to deny foreign corporations the right to do business within the State. In a certain case one of the conditions of a State statute under which a foreign corporation was permitted to enter and do business within the State was that it surrender its right as a foreign corporation to sue in the Federal courts. The Supreme Court held the statute invalid in this respect, holding that the right of a State to exclude a foreign corporation cannot be used to require a waiver of constitutional rights (Barron v. Burnside (121 U. S. 186)).

In the case of Frost Trucking Co. v. R. R. Co. (271 U. S. 595), the Court said:

> It is not necessary to challenge the proposition that, as a general rule, the State having power to deny a privilege altogether, may grant it upon such conditions as it sees fit to impose. But the power of the State in that respect is not unlimited; and one of the limitations is that it may not impose conditions which require the relinquishment of constitutional rights.

I have been contending for the constitutional right of the inferior courts to issue injunctions, under the equity power conferred by the Constitution, and we may not require that in order for citizens to avail themselves of this right they must abandon a constitutional privilege and not seek injunctive relief for the protection of their persons or their property. The Court continued:

> If the State may compel the surrender of one constitutional right as a condition of its favor, it may, in like manner, compel a surrender of all. It is inconceivable that guaranties embedded in the Constitution of the United States may thus be manipulated out of existence.

So I repeat, Mr. President, that the Constitution having granted to the judiciary of the United States equitable powers as well as the usual legal powers, we may not deprive litigants of their right to their remedy, nor courts of their authority to exercise equitable as well as legal power, and to grant equitable as well as legal relief.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TRUMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator go to the extent, in that view, of saying that the Congress has no right to limit the time and the measure of injunctive relief which the Court has the right to grant?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am not quite sure as to the implications which might follow from the question. I do say—and this is the point for which I am contending primarily—that all judicial power has been conferred by the Constitution upon the courts, the Supreme Court and the inferior courts, and having conferred that power we may not, as in the case to which I have just referred, prevent the exercise of that power by the court by imposing upon litigants restrictions which would result in a denial of their constitutional rights.

I think perhaps a law might be passed providing that the inferior courts granting injunctive relief must pursue a certain course, but that limitation must not be such as to prevent this power from being practically operative, and so restrict the granting of relief in violation of due process of law.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I should like to ask the Senator if it is not regarded as a sensible and sound principle in our system of government that judicial power is measured entirely by human rights?

Mr. KING. Not altogether.

Mr. AUSTIN. And that if there is a human right there is a correlative judicial power to save and protect it.

Mr. KING. Absolutely; but the right of the person to have his property rights protected.

Mr. AUSTIN. That being so, all judicial power being vested in the judicial department, Congress cannot remove it. Is not that the necessary step which follows?

Mr. KING. That is the position I take; and the inferior courts having been endowed with judicial power, they may not by legislation of the Congress be deprived of power to protect the citizen, his property, his life, and his liberty.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. If we should assume that Congress has so much control over this supposedly independent department of the Government that it may limit and regulate that department, if we were to admit that that power existed, could we go a step further and say that Congress has the power entirely to destroy this judicial power and function, or must we, if we limit and curtail one court, open up another tribunal for the people where the same power that corresponds to the human right may be exercised?

Mr. KING. As I have attempted to show, the inferior courts are constitutional courts and are invested with judicial power. In my opinion, to strip the Federal courts of their authority to exercise judicial power would be not only an injustice but a betrayal of the rights of the people. If Congress, in a spirit of resentment, or in utter disregard of its duty, should refuse to provide funds for the maintenance of the Supreme Court of the United States, or should attempt to abolish all inferior courts, the people would be justified in denouncing its course as a violation of the Constitution and a betrayal of the rights of the people.

As I have indicated, it was the duty of Congress to set up a Supreme Court, for which provision was made in the Constitution, and to provide for inferior courts to exercise, in connection with the Supreme Court, the fullness of judicial power. Congress would fail if it provided judicial tribunals in which might be exercised only a portion of such judicial power. The judicial department of the Government is the repository of all judicial power, and to attempt to strip it of any of its power would call for condemnation.

I have referred to bankruptcy cases and cases where corporations were denied rights unless they surrendered the right to sue in Federal courts.

There is a striking analogy between these cases and the measure to which I am referring. It seems to me we cannot justify our position if we say that Federal courts, even if they believe acts of Congress are unconstitutional, cannot exercise their judicial power to enjoin the enforcement of those acts. That would be, in effect, to declare that their hands are tied, and that their undoubted chancery power preserved to them by the Constitution may not be exercised even though the enforcement of an act would certainly result in irreparable injury to the litigant, and would amount to a taking of his property without due process of law. Under that view, the litigant is to be denied any relief whatever; and this may be the case even though Congress did not intend the litigant's case to be covered by the statute, but the statute is made to apply to him by an erroneous and technical construction by the executive department.

It seems to me that we are not justified in forcing the courts to give up one of their constitutional powers. Is this a legitimate exercise of congressional authority to regulate the jurisdiction of the inferior courts? Did the Constitution bestow such a power on the Congress for a purpose of this character? I think not.

In referring to the power to punish for contempt in connection with the provisions of the Clayton Act requiring a trial by jury in such a case upon demand of the accused, the Supreme Court said, in the case of Michaelson v. U. S. (266 U. S.):

> That the power to punish for contempts is inherent in all courts, has been many times decided and may be regarded as settled law.
> It is essential to the administration of justice. The courts of the United States, when called into existence and vested with jurisdiction over any subject, at once became possessed of this power. So far as the inferior Federal courts are concerned, however, it is not beyond the authority of Congress (Ex parte Robinson, 19 Wall. 505, 510–511; Bessette v. W. B. Conkey Co. (194 U. S. 324, 325)), but the attributes which inhere in that power and are inseparable from it can neither be abrogated nor rendered practically inoperative. That it may be regulated within limits not precisely defined may not be doubted. The statute now under review is of the latter character. It is of narrow scope, dealing with the single class where the act or thing constituting the contempt is also a crime in the ordinary sense.

In reaching this conclusion the Court was careful to point out that contempts of the kind within the statute were in the early law punishable only by the usual criminal procedure, and that in England they still may be and are preferably tried in that way. The Court concluded that the statutory extension of the right to trial by jury to this class of contempts did not invade the power of the courts as conferred by the Constitution; but this decision is no authority for the proposition that Congress can take away the power of injunction from the Federal courts. In fact, it seems to recognize the existence of such a right in the Federal courts, and that it cannot be abrogated or rendered practically inoperative.

Section 20 of the Clayton Act provides that—

> No injunction shall be granted by any court of the United States, or a judge or the judges thereof, in any case between employers and employees * * * or between persons employed and persons seeking employment involving or growing out of a dispute concerning terms or conditions of employment unless necessary to prevent irreparable injury to property, or to a property right of the party making the application, for which injury there is no adequate remedy at law, and such property or property right must be described with particularity in the application, which must be in writing and sworn to by the applicant or by his agent or attorney.

The Congress did not go to the extent of denying the right to grant injunctive relief where irreparable injury and harm would result to the citizen. Where there is no adequate remedy at law, they held that the injunctive power under that statute was properly exercised.

The Supreme Court, in upholding the validity of this section, pointed out that it introduces no new principle into the equity jurisprudence of the courts but is merely declaratory of what was always the best practice, which Congress thought it wise to stabilize and render uniform (American Foundries v. Tri-City Council, 257 U. S. 184).

It is obvious that there is nothing in this decision which recognizes the right of Congress to abrogate the power of injunction or render it practically inoperative by the Federal courts. It has been suggested that the case of Smith v. Apple (264 U. S. 274), may be cited as authority for the statement that the power to issue an injunction is not necessarily within the class of inherent attributes belonging to a court. That case, however, does not justify such a conclusion; it related merely to a statute restricting the right of a Federal court in a certain class of cases to issue injunctions staying proceedings in a State court. The constitutionality of such a statute was not raised or considered by the Court.

While the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals in the case of Levering & Garrigues Co. v. Marvin, upholding the validity of the Anti-Injunction Act of March 23, 1932, might be regarded as affording some support for the proposition of restricting the power of injunction by the inferior courts, this case did not reach the Supreme Court, and therefore cannot be considered as determining the question. Moreover, the Anti-Injunction Act of March 23, 1932, did not make the power to issue an injunction wholly inoperative in the case of all Federal statutes. The restriction was confined to labor disputes not affecting interstate commerce or diversity of citizenship. But the bill to which I am referring prohibits the lower Federal courts from granting injunctions in all cases where it is sought to enjoin, suspend, or restrain the enforcement, operation, or execution of any act of Congress.

Reference has been made to section 3224 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which provides that—

* * * no suit for the purpose of restraining the assessment or collection of any tax may be maintained in any court. * * *

The Supreme Court has pointed out that the principal reason for this statute is that—

* * * as courts are without authority to apportion or equalize taxes or to make assessments, such suits would enable those liable for taxes in some amount to delay payment or possibly to escape their lawful burden and so to interfere with and thwart the collection of revenues for the support of the Government. * * *

But certainly no such reason exists in the case of every Federal statute. Moreover, even in tax cases the courts have invoked their equity powers where there existed special and extraordinary circumstances sufficient to bring the case within some acknowledged head of equity jurisprudence (Miller v. Standard Nut Margarine Co., 284 U. S. 509).

I respectfully insist that while Congress has the power—and I believe it to be its duty—to create the inferior Federal courts and regulate their jurisdiction within the limits provided for within the Constitution, it cannot exercise this power so as to destroy the rights and guaranties under the Constitution. In Truax v. Corrigan (257 U. S. 312), the Supreme Court held invalid a statute enacted by the State of Arizona which, as interpreted by the State supreme court, exempted ex-employees, when committing tortious and irreparable injury to the business of their former employers, from restraint by injunction. The Court held that this statute violated the due-process clause of the fourteenth amendment. While it stated that the decision in that case would not invalidate section 20 of the Clayton Act, it was pointed out that the Clayton Act was construed very differently from the construction placed upon the Arizona statute by the State court.

To take away from the litigant the right to equitable relief by way of injunction, of course, amounts to a taking of property without due process of law, and, therefore, is a direct violation of the fifth amendment. To strip inferior Federal courts of their injunctive power, and not give the litigant the power to apply to the State courts for this relief, would be taking away a power necessary to protect life, liberty, and property under the Constitution.

Mr. Justice Brewer, in speaking of the injunction, said:

To take away the equitable power of restraining wrong is a step toward barbarism rather than a step forward to a higher civilization.

The essential independence of the exercise of the judicial power of the United States in the enforcement of constitutional rights requires that the Federal courts shall continue to exercise this judicial power of injunction. Certainly the court will not permit this power to be taken away under an arbitrary and unreasonable abuse of power given the Congress to regulate the jurisdiction of the Federal courts. Its absence would be to sap the judicial power as it exists under the Constitution, and to establish a government of legislative authority under which personal and property rights may be disregarded and abuses perpetrated.

EXCERPTS FROM MEMORANDUM ABOVE REFERRED TO

In the American Doctrine of Judicial Supremacy, Prof. C. G. Haines devotes a chapter to the discussion of cases and precedents before 1789 wherein the doctrine of judicial review of legislative acts was involved. In the chapter referred to he discusses the following cases: Case of Josiah Philips, Virginia, 1778; Holmes v. Walton, New Jersey, 1780; Commonwealth v. Caton, Virginia, 1782; Rutgers v. Waddington, New York, 1784; Symsbury Case, Connecticut, 1785; Trevett v. Weeden, Rhode Island, 1786; Bayard v. Singleton, North Carolina, 1787; and a Massachusetts precedent in 1788.

Professor Haines states that the list of cases referred to "* * * is not intended to be exhaustive—for historians are still finding data on new cases—but representative precedents are selected which were known and recognized as instances involving either directly or indirectly the issue of the validity of a legislative act as in conflict with natural law and natural rights or with fundamental law."

He also points out that "The account of early cases is not confined to definite legal precedents, for a number of cases are included in which no act was held invalid, but in which the judges discussed the issue of judicial review in the form of dicta * * *."

Mr. Brinton Coxe, in Judicial Powers and Unconstitutional Legislation, refers to the cases commented upon by Mr. Haines.

Charles Warren, in Congress, the Constitution, and the Supreme Court, refers to the cases of Trevett v. Weeden, Holmes v. Walton, and Bayard v. Singleton, and states:

"In Pennsylvania itself, a Committee of the Council of Censors, reporting in 1784 on breaches of the State constitution, had recorded many 'flagrant' and 'wanton' violations of the 'sacred rights of a citizen to trial by jury.' The legislatures of four other States, prior to the Federal Constitution, had sought to deprive citizens of the right to jury trial; and in each State a State court had decided the State statute to be invalid."

Mr. Warren states that another—

"* * * case has been little referred to by historians; but it appears that inferior courts of New Hampshire, in 1787, held invalid a law of that State depriving citizens of jury trial; and the news of this decision reached New York and Philadelphia and was published in the daily papers while the Federal Convention was sitting, and just at the time when the New Hampshire Delegates arrived at the Convention."

There can be little doubt but that these early cases were known to the framers of the Constitution. Madison undoubtedly referred to Trevett against Weeden when he declared during the course of the Constitutional Convention that—

"* * * In Rhode Island the judges who refused to execute an unconstitutional law were displaced and others substituted by the legislature who would be willing instruments of the wicked and arbitrary plans of their masters * * *."

On June 6, 1787, Gerry said to the framers of the Constitution:

"* * * In some of the States the judges had actually set aside laws as being against the Constitution * * *."

Mr. Warren notes that the Pennsylvania Packet, a newspaper of wide circulation, informed its readers on several days in April and May 1787 that Varnum's famous argument in the case of "Trevett against Weeden on information and complaint for refusing paper bills in payment" of indebtedness could be purchased from book sellers; and also that the Independent Gazeteer (Philadelphia) in June 1787, published a "letter from a gentleman in Virginia to his friend in this city" in which it was stated:

"* * * The majority of the House of Delegates in Rhode Island have lost all character and even shame itself. Yet you see there are honest men in that State. The judges behaved handsomely in the affair of the Tender law."

Professor McLaughlin, in Constitutional History of the United States, referring to the preconvention period, states (p. 312):

"If we examine the decisions of State courts passing upon the construction or the validity of State acts, we find a number of instances in which the principle we are here considering (judicial review) was applied or announced. * * * The early exercise of this power by State courts to declare such State acts void as they believed to be in conflict with the principles of State constitutions is especially impressive because no constitution contained the specific statement that it was law. Pronouncements of the principle which we are considering was made both before and after the Federal Constitution was adopted."

Mr. William M. Meigs, writing in the American Law Review, states:

"It is plain enough, too, from the history of the years about 1787, that the colonial doctrine was not forgotten, and there are several reported decisions in several different States close to that time asserting or enforcing the judicial power. * * * Again, these specific cases were beyond all question in the minds of members of the Convention, when they referred to such decisions by the courts and discussed in general the powers of the judiciary in regard to unconstitutional laws * * *" (40 Am. Law. Rev. 650–651).

Professor McMaster, in his History of the United States (vol. 5, p. 395), informs us that—

"When the struggle for the rights of Englishmen took on the form of a struggle for independence, the same idea of the judicial control of the legislative power was taken up by the leaders and asserted more broadly still. * * * But it was not until the Colonies had become States, with written constitutions of government, that the courts began the continuous practice of controlling legislation by deciding laws unconstitutional."

Prof. Hugh E. Willis, in his recent book on Constitutional Law, declares (pp. 75–76):

"One reason for the fact that the Supreme Court finally took this power to itself was the colonial practice. The colonial courts, and on appeal the Privy Council of England, had the power to declare legislative acts void if in conflict with colonial charters. The colonists, consequently, acquired the habit of seeing colonial laws occasionally declared void by the courts. Hence, upon the adoption of State constitutions it was the natural thing for the State courts tacitly to assume the function of interpreting the new State constitutions; and judges in the States of New Jersey, New York, and Rhode Island rendered decisions declaring legislative acts unconstitutional because in violation of their constitutions; and this action was generally acquiesced in, though not without some opposition. This accustomed the people of the new country to the supremacy of the judiciary over the legislative branch of government."

Professor Dickerson, in his able discussion of the subject of judicial review in American Colonial Government, 1696 to 1765, states (p. 227):

"During the period from 1686 to 1765 nearly 400 different laws from the continental American Colonies alone were disallowed by the Crown. * * *"

Professor Haines, in his American Doctrine of Judicial Supremacy, refers to the extent of judicial review in colonial times, and states (p. 49):

"The extent to which such an administrative review was exercised is shown by the fact that of 8,563 acts submitted by the Colonies, 469, or 5.5 percent, were disallowed by orders in council."

In The Review of American Colonial Legislation by the King in Council, Elmer Beecher Russel observes:

"The power of review exercised by the Privy Council was analogous to that assumed by the Supreme Court of the United States after the formation of the new Government. The Privy Council, it is true, declared acts void upon grounds other than the contravention of a fundamental law; but it frequently did disallow laws because they conflicted with the colonial charters, or with acts of the British Parliament or the common law of England. Under its tutelage, the colonists became accustomed to a limitation upon the power of their legislatures. In this sense the work of the Privy Council constituted at once a precedent and a preparation for the power of judicial annulment upon constitutional grounds now exercised by the State and Federal courts in the United States. * * *"

Professor Dickerson points out that—

"The Declaration of Independence lays the responsibility for the royal vetoes at the door of the King, but probably unjustly. Although every order in council for the disallowance of a law stated that it was done by 'the King in council', the King had nothing to do with the matter personally. The phrase is only one of the numerous fictions of the British Government. The real work of considering colonial laws was done by the board of trade, and the final action was only recorded as done by the King in the presence of and with the advice of his Privy Council. Hence 'disallowed by the King in Council' must be understood to mean by the board of trade on the advice of able legal opinion and finally ratified by the Privy Council. As will be shown later, this action corresponded very closely to that of a careful court of record, rather than to the hasty, arbitrary action of an irresponsible individual * * *."

Mr. Meigs, in The American Doctrine of Judicial Power (47 Am. Law Rev. 689) declares:

"This system prevailed everywhere throughout the country for several generations—about a century and a half—and I think modern history would tell us in convincing tones that such a doctrine, so grown, would not be likely suddenly to die out and disappear from the face of our corner of earth, simply because we broke loose from Great Britain * * *. It certainly did not disappear, but soon began to dovetail with our new system * * *."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I shall occupy only a few minutes.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I desire to submit some remarks suggested by the statements made by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall take only a few minutes in making the remarks I have to make.

Mr. CONNALLY. After the Senator from Texas shall have concluded his remarks, I think the Senator from Tennessee may feel inclined to speak again.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Committee on Finance is in session at this moment. I regret that I am not able to remain here to listen to the eloquent remarks of the Senator from Tennessee, as I am obliged to go to the meeting of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am going to take only a few moments. The perfect answer to the Senator from Utah is that my bill does not really affect the judicial power of courts at all. It affects their jurisdiction. I call attention to the provision complained of:

SEC. 264a. No district court or circuit court of appeals shall have jurisdiction of—

Of course, all lawyers know the difference between jurisdiction and power. In my bill I am not discussing power; I am discussing the jurisdiction.

No district court or circuit court of appeals shall have jurisdiction of, and no district or circuit judge shall have jurisdiction or power to issue an injunction in, any suit in which it is sought to enjoin, suspend, or restrain the enforcement, operation, or execution of any act of Congress, or any part or provision thereof, unless and until such act shall have been held finally invalid by the Supreme Court.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me just for a question?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Does the Senator, in his bill, provide any place to supply the loss of jurisdiction?

Mr. McKELLAR. Why, of course. There is ample jurisdiction in the court to try a case involving the validity or invalidity of an act of Congress. The only thing done by the section of which the Senator complains is to postpone the actual issuance of an injunction until the Supreme Court shall have passed upon the question.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the Senator yield to me for another question?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. In a civil issue involving such a question as confiscation of property, has the Senator provided in his bill some place to which the citizen can go and preserve the status quo during the contest of the civil issue?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; that has not been done. I have examined all the cases which have been held to be unconstitutional by the Supreme Court. I think there were eight cases where an injunction was prayed for and the declaration made in the pleadings that irreparable injury would occur unless the injunction issued. I ask the Senator to examine those eight cases. If he will, I think he will find that in none of the eight could irreparable injury possibly have occurred by the postponement of an injunction until the Supreme Court had passed upon the question in the quick method provided for by the bill introduced by me.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I ask the Senator whether, in his practice, he has not found, coming within his own observation, many instances where irreparable injury would occur?

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, yes; but not in connection with the invalidity of an act of Congress. In my practice—and I have had a very active and rather an extensive one—I do not recall where it was necessary for me to allege that an act of Congress was invalid and to ask for an injunction on account of irreparable injury which might ensue.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Texas always enjoys the addresses and arguments of the eminent and able Senator from Tennessee, but the Senator from Texas wishes to challenge a statement the Senator made a little while ago, and I should like to have him address himself to that question now.

The Senator from Tennessee said that the power exercised by the Supreme Court in declaring acts of Congress unconstitutional was an assumed power, and he evidently based that statement on the fact that there was no express language in the Constitution providing that the Supreme Court may declare acts of Congress to be unconstitutional. Let me say to the Senator, however, that there is nothing in the Constitution to the effect that the Supreme Court can do anything except to exercise jurisdiction in "all cases in law and equity arising under this Constitution", and so on, and so on.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is correct.

Mr. CONNALLY. So one may not, therefore, conclude because the Constitution does not say that the Supreme Court may not declare acts of Congress unconstitutional that it may not do so, for there is no catalog, there is no listing of the powers. On the other hand, does not the Senator from Tennessee know that in a number of the States, under their State constitutions adopted after 1776, State supreme courts have repeatedly held State statutes unconstitutional? Furthermore, does not the Senator know that in the debates in Constitutional Convention it was repeatedly pointed out in arguments that if Congress enacted a law that was not in conformity with the Constitution the courts would hold such action beyond their power? Is not the Senator also aware of the fact that in the Virginia ratifying convention Patrick Henry, George Nicholas, and James Madison pointed out that very thing? Does the Senator not know that in the Federalist Papers, which were issued in support of the adoption of the Constitution by the ratifying conventions, it was repeatedly pointed out by Mr. Hamilton, Mr. Madison, and John Jay that the Supreme Court did have such power? So how can the Senator say that it was an assumed power?

Mr. McKELLAR. I will undertake to answer the Senator's question. In the first place, so far as State supreme courts declaring acts of Congress unconstitutional is concerned, there have been a few such cases. I think one Senator pointed out there were seven, and I think the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] said there were more than that, but they were inconsequential. The difference between the two cases is that State legislatures have supreme control over everything arising in their States, but there is a different way of construing what comes before the Supreme Court. In other words, the Supreme Court of the United States has jurisdiction only over those matters concerning which it is given jurisdiction by the Constitution of the United States, and the Supreme Court can exercise its power only in those cases in which it has been granted jurisdiction. That is the difference.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. The analogy the Senator draws is an argument against his position, because if a State legislature has complete and plenary power except where limited by the State constitution—and that is the rule—it would require a more aggressive act on the part of a State court to declare the State legislature had acted unconstitutionally than it would in a government of reserved powers where the authority of the Congress is limited by the Constitution, and all the more would reason then arise that the Supreme Court of the United States should have the power to hold acts of Congress unconstitutional if they contravened the fundamental law.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is entitled to that view if he desires. I think there have been but very few State statutes declared to be unconstitutional by State courts. As I pointed out a while ago, the Board of Tax Appeals the other day solemnly declared in a written opinion that an act of Congress was unconstitutional. I presume that some justice of the peace has held that State statutes were unconstitutional, and it may be that a justice of the peace has held that a statute of the United States was unconstitutional; the Senator may find some cases of that kind, but that does not concern——

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. Just a moment. That does not concern what is being put forward by the bill introduced by me. The bill proposes to limit the jurisdiction of courts to issue injunctions in certain cases.

Before I go further, and before I am interrupted any more, will Senators permit me to show the exact authority for the bill?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I wish to say that while I am in sympathy with the view of the Senator——

Mr. McKELLAR. I am glad to hear the Senator say so.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am not in sympathy with it for the reasons he gives.

Mr. McKELLAR. Wait a moment. The purpose of the bill is to limit the granting of injunctions. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] has just argued very elaborately that the Congress cannot limit the injunctive power; that it cannot take it away, and he declined to answer the question as to whether it could be done even in part. Now let me read from page 1232 of the Judicial Code. Congress passed this act:

> No interlocutory injunction suspending or restraining the enforcement, operation, or execution of, or setting aside, in whole or in part, any order made or entered by the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be issued or granted by any district court of the United States, or by any judge thereof, or by any circuit judge acting as district judge, unless the application for the same shall be presented to a circuit or district judge, and shall be heard and determined by three judges, of whom at least one shall be a circuit judge, and unless a majority of the said three shall concur in granting such application.

Then there are other limitations provided.

There is a distinct limitation on the power of a district judge to issue an injunction in that class of cases; indeed, a district judge cannot issue one at all; he is deprived of jurisdiction or power to issue an injunction at all. That act has gone before the Supreme Court and the Court has upheld it. If it is not a precedent for what I propose by my bill, then I am unable to understand what language means.

If, as the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] argues, the power to issue an injunction in a case before the district court is a part of the "judicial power" mentioned in the Constitution, of which the district court cannot be deprived by act of Congress, then the Supreme Court could not have upheld the constitutionality of that act. So much for that act.

Mr. CONNALLY. May I say to the Senator—and then I promise not to interrupt him further—that I agree with the Senator in that——

Mr. McKELLAR. I am glad to hear the Senator say so.

Mr. CONNALLY. I think the Congress has the right to limit the jurisdiction of the inferior courts.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is all my bill proposes to do, namely, to limit their jurisdiction.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am not hostile to the purpose of the Senator's bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am delighted to hear that statement.

There is one other precedent which I think demonstrates clearly that the Senator from Utah is entirely wrong in his contention about "judicial power." I now read from section 107, on page 1327 of the Code. We all remember the bill there referred to. It was an act passed regulating the issuance of injunctions in labor disputes.

> 107. Issuance of injunctions in labor disputes; hearing, findings of court; notice to affected persons; temporary restraining order; undertakings. No court of the United States shall have jurisdiction to issue a temporary or permanent injunction in any case involving or growing out of a labor dispute, as herein defined, except after hearing the testimony of witnesses in open court (with opportunity for cross-examination) in support of the allegations of a complaint made under oath, and the testimony in opposition thereto, if offered, and except after findings of fact by the court to the effect: (a) That unlawful acts have been threatened and will be committed unless restrained or have been committed and will be continued unless restrained, but no injunction or temporary restraining order shall be issued on account of any threat or unlawful act excepting against the person or persons, association, or organization making the threat or committing the unlawful act or actually authorizing or ratifying the same after actual knowledge thereof;
> (b) That substantial and irreparable injury to complainant's property will follow;
>
> (c) That as to each item of relief granted greater injury will be inflicted upon complainant by the denial of relief than will be inflicted upon defendants by the granting of relief;
>
> (d) That complainant has no adequate remedy at law; and
> (e) That the public officers charged with the duty to protect complainant's property are unable or unwilling to furnish adequate protection.

In other words, in that case the Congress passed a most stringent act limiting the granting of temporary injunctions, and the Supreme Court has upheld that statute; that is the law of the land; all the amendment offered by me proposes to do is to limit the jurisdiction—in what respect? Limits the jurisdiction of trial judges in injunction cases where the invalidity of an act of Congress is alleged; that is all. Certainly if Congress can limit jurisdiction in the case of labor disputes, if it can limit jurisdiction, for instance, when the Interstate Commerce Commission, which is created by Congress, is involved, if it can limit the granting of injunctions in the case of an order of the Commission, surely Congress can limit the granting of an injunction where the constitutionality of an act of Congress is in question.

A remarkable thing has happened in that 73 acts of Congress have been declared invalid in whole or in part, and the United States Government, which was more interested in the upholding of those acts than any person or institution in the world, was not even made a party. A complainant comes into court and alleges irreparable injury, unless a temporary injunction shall issue, on the theory that an act of Congress is invalid and unconstitutional and void, without even making the Government a party, without the Government even knowing anything about it. A district judge assumes to himself the right to declare the act unconstitutional and issues an injunction against its enforcement. I say we ought to do as much for acts of Congress as we do for a finding of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator suggested that there is no possible doubt as to the power of Congress to limit the jurisdiction of Federal courts below the Supreme Court, because they are courts created by the Congress and it is a question as to what jurisdiction Congress shall confer upon them. The question I have in mind is whether the Senator, in order to reach a certain result, has not gone too far.

I am thinking of the type of case involving a small man without means to take his case to the Supreme Court. For instance, he may have a mining claim in a mountainous section, a claim well established and patented. By some inadvertence Congress later may have given the right to some great corporation to trespass upon his property. It may have enacted a subsequent statute violating his mineral rights. The circumstances may be of such character that a trespass for a limited time might involve the loss of the valuable ore within his land and might destroy his rights. It seems to me the small man who could not reach the Supreme Court ought to be able to go into a court of original jurisdiction and have an injunction issued to protect him.

The Senator from Tennessee is largely thinking of the reverse, where a great corporation is taking advantage of the situation, as it did in his State, to suspend the operation of beneficent laws. I am thinking of cases where the rights of an individual have been trespassed upon by acts of Congress. His proposed statute would render the small man helpless, because he could not get to the Supreme Court. It seems to me what the Senator ought to do is to limit somewhat the provisions of his bill so as to accomplish justice on the one side and avoid injustice on the other side.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I would not want to do an injustice to any citizen of the United States. There may be some justice in the Senator's contention. If he thinks there is, I wish he would prepare the kind of an amendment to my bill he would like to submit and let it go before the splendid Committee on the Judiciary, presided over by the able Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST]. I am sure that if there is a real right involved in his proposal an amendment can be worked out to meet the situation.

But let me say to the Senator that I have examined most of the cases in which the allegation is made by the complainant that the act involved is invalid and that irreparable injury would come to the complainant unless a temporary injunction should issue immediately. In the cases which have been held unconstitutional by the Supreme Court there is hardly a suggestion of irreparable injury that I have been able to find, except that stated pro forma in the bill of complaint. There may be cases where irreparable injury might be involved. If the Senator will prepare and offer such an amendment, I shall be happy to accept the amendment to bring about what he undoubtedly has in mind.

Mr. ADAMS. May I offer an additional illustration? For instance, Congress, under certain pressure, might enact a law restricting freedom of speech or freedom of the press. Such things have been done; for instance, as the Senator knows, back in 1801. I might be operating a small country newspaper and printing some things which would be thought to be in violation of such a statute. I would be perfectly helpless unless I could stop the officials of the Government from enforcing the law.

I think I heard the Senator read a provision of the statute in reference to certain carefully worded protection about certain injunctions. In the State of Colorado we have a provision that if a man goes into court and asks for a restraining order without notice, he must give a substantial bond and must give notice within not more than 5 days. In other words, he could not tie up a statute or an operation of the Government or of a private individual or corporation for more than a very limited number of days without bringing the interested parties into court and demonstrating that irreparable injury would be done. Then if the allegation in the application for a restraining order that irreparable injury would result is not proven, judgment is to be entered upon the bond.

I think we have rather successfully done away with abuse of the injunctive power. I want to see the injunctive power used where it will protect against the doing of wrong and where it will accomplish justice. I should hate to have the Federal court lose its power to issue an injunction in cases where it is the only available remedy to protect the little fellow.

Mr. McKELLAR. In the first place, the injunctions referred to in my bill are only those which would come within the allegation in the complaint that a statute enacted by the United States Congress is invalid. That is the first thing. As I have said, suits of this kind have been brought without ever making the Government a party or even giving the Government notice. For instance, a district judge is presiding over a court which was created by the Congress. He is appointed by the President and cnfirmed by the Senate. In 10 minutes after he has taken the oath of office, under the present system, whether right or wrong—and I am not passing on that at this moment—he has the authority and power to declare any act of Congress invalid and to issue an injunction restraining its enforcement.

I have today introduced a redrafted bill, Senate bill 1437, containing an amendement requiring any complainant who alleges that an act of Congress is invalid and asks for an injunction on that theory to make the United States Government a party by service on the district attorney of the particular district and by notification to the Attorney General of the United States. I think such a provision will commend itself to Senators as being absolutely fair. Surely the Congress of the United States ought not to permit its acts, solemnly enacted perhaps after years of debate both as to their policy and their validity, to be declared unconstitutional without the Government being made a party and represented.

Mr. ADAMS. I am in entire sympathy with that suggestion.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think that will meet the view of every Senator and every Representative.

Under the terms of the bill which I had the honor to introduce, provision is made not only for limitation of injunction in such cases if the validity of acts of Congress is alleged, but provision is made for speedy determination of such cases. They ought to be determined within at least 60 days after they are filed, and then no irreparable injury would be done even in such cases as the Senator from Colorado has suggested.

Mr. ADAMS. The matter in which I am interested is that we shall not destroy a useful remedy because of abuses that have occurred under it. We should reserve the remedy where it is in the interest of the protection of justice rather than destroy the remedy because it has been abused. We should regulate its use.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the Senator's views and mine are, generally speaking, along the same line.

Mr. President, in conclusion, let me say something with reference to the T. V. A. Act. The T. V. A. Act was enacted into law after most careful consideration by both the House and the Senate. It has been in operation now for more than 3 years; and, whatever may be its merits, the Government at great expense has been attempting to administer it. Scores of millions of dollars have been spent on it. Last year, as I recall, the Government spent or authorized the spending of $36,000,000 on this proposal.

I am informed the Georgia Power Co. went before a Georgia Federal court, alleged that this act was unconstitutional and void, and asked for an injunction stopping the T. V. A. from proceeding further. If that injunction had been granted it would have cost the Government a great deal of money. The matter was tried in the Georgia court. The Georgia judge denied the relief asked for and the case was dropped right there. Then the Georgia Power Co. went over and joined the Alabama Power Co. and several other power companies in that district, and they filed another bill making the same charges in the district court of the United States at Birmingham. After doing that they were in doubt about whether they could get a decree favorable to them in that court; so they either dismissed that case or dropped it, and these same people came over into my State, went to the district court at Knoxville, and asked for an inunction. The district judge there found that he was disqualified to hear the matter by reason of ownership of stock by his wife in some power company, and he referred the case to another district judge in an adjoining district of Tennessee, and that district judge came over and issued an injunction which stopped the entire T. V. A., and not only did that but stopped it at the greatest loss to the Government. It is believed by those in charge of the T. V. A. that the issuance of this injunction will mean the loss of millions of dollars. It stopped the whole work.

The United States was not made a party to that suit. It cannot go into that suit and make an argument, except by courtesy. It has no right in that suit. It is not even a party. Of course, the T. V. A. is a party. I think we will all agree that that is not fair and right. That is not the way to attack an act which has been solemnly passed by the Congress of the United States and signed by the President, and been in operation for 3 or more years. I am sure no one will say that that is right; and that is one of the reasons why I am here asking for relief. Let us have an orderly procedure. When a citizen, whether a citizen of one State or another, desires to have an act of Congress declared unconstitutional and to have injunctive relief on it, let us look for a moment at the side of the Government.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Does the Senator see any distinction between a suit where the Government is already a party—that is, where the injunction is against some agency of the Government—and a case where the question of constitutional law arises where two individuals are parties, and the Government neither directly nor indirectly is a party?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, when I see in the reports appearing in the press that the Board of Tax Appeals has declared another act of Congress unconstitutional; when I find that when a corporation has a case it goes to one judge, and if that judge will issue an injunction, all well and good, but if he does not the corporation dismisses the case and goes to another one, and then to another one, and then to a fourth one, what are we coming to? We ought to have some method of procedure which will permit the Government in all cases to be a defendant, and in that way to be able to defend the acts of its Congress. Knowing the Senator from Maryland as I do, I am sure he believes that should be done.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, what I rose to say—and I am afraid I was not very clear—is that there cannot be any question about the duty and the right of the Federal Government to be at the trial where its agency is attacked. Where the Government's agency is not being attacked, however, but the suit is simply one between two individuals, I asked the Senator whether or not his research and the facts which had come to his attention supported the wisdom of the Government entering such a case, as compared with the Government entering a case where one of its agencies is involved.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am happy to answer the Senator. I believe that in any case where an act of Congress is charged to be unconstitutional and invalid, and relief is sought upon that ground, the Government itself should be notified and should defend the suit through its Attorney General.

Now just one other word.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am not arguing with the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. I know that.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am trying to elicit some information. Let me state a situation to the Senator.

Let us suppose that in a criminal case a man is indicted before a Federal court. Let us suppose it is alleged that before the grand jury some improper procedure was taken; namely, that the hearings were not secret, or that the testimony before the grand jury was taken down by a stenographer, and then the transcript was taken over and left in the stenographer's private office, five squares from the grand-jury room, where persons could be put on notice as to what testimony was given before the grand jury, and consequently would be in a position to protect themselves or to testify accordingly. In some jurisdictions a situation of that kind would be held to invalidate the indictment, because the proceeding would be unconstitutional. The actions of grand juries are secret; and, obviously, if what a grand jury is doing is known on the outside by persons likely to be called before it, they can protect themselves, or help to "frame" persons who might be under investigation; and in a number of jurisdictions, as a matter of public policy, action of that kind is held sufficient to invalidate an indictment. A motion to quash the indictment would be filed because the procedure taken before the grand jury was unconstitutional, in that it tended, without due process of law, to deprive a man of his right to life and liberty. In that case would the Attorney General be called upon to enter the proceeding? It would be a clear case of violating a constitutional right or prerogative.

Mr. McKELLAR. He ought to be served with process and notified, so that if, for any reason, the Government's rights were in jeopardy, he could be present.

Mr. ASHURST and Mr. MINTON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the Senator from Arizona rose first. I yield first to him. Then I will yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I have listened with great interest to the suggestion of the able Senator from Maryland. If the Senator from Tennessee will permit me to reply——

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. ASHURST. The Attorney General is already in court. Wherever a United States district attorney is asserting any right or power, he is doing it under the jurisdiction of the Attorney General. It is not necessary to notify the Attorney General, because he is already in court through the district attorney.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Arizona is correct about that.

Mr. TYDINGS. The point I make is that the Senator from Tennessee really means this should be done in civil cases only.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. I was using that illustration simply to show that there are certain times when the district attorney already acts for the Attorney General, and the Government is on notice. I suggest, then, that the Senator use the words "in civil cases", so as to avoid a construction that does not seem apropos.

Mr. McKELLAR. Perhaps that should be done.

I now yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, the observation of the Senator from Maryland would not come within the terms of the measure proposed by the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator from Tennessee is contemplating an act of Congress, while the circumstance outlined by the Senator from Maryland does not involve an act of Congress at all.

Mr. McKELLAR. Surely.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; what I meant to refer to was any act regulating grand jury procedure which envisages the guarantees of the Constitution. The Senator is arguing for this procedure in civil matters; and I am trying to point out that criminal proceedings ought to be excluded, because they are not within the purview of the Senator's objective.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, in conclusion, I merely wish to quote the absolute power given expressly by the Constitution—not by implication, not by court assumption, but the absolute delegation of power to the Congress—to pass such a bill as I have outlined.

Article III, section 2, of the Constitution, with which we are all familiar, provides as follows. I am quoting it literally for the RECORD:

> The judicial power shall extend to all cases, in law and equity, arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority; to all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls; to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction; to controversies to which the United States shall be a party; to controversies between two or more States; between a State and citizens of another State; between citizens of different States; between citizens of the same State claiming lands under grants of different States; and between a State, or the citizens thereof, and foreign States, citizens, or subjects.

That is the grant of power to the courts—the specification of cases over which the courts shall have jurisdiction; and then this limitation is put on:

> In all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls, and those in which a State shall be party, the Supreme Court shall have original jurisdiction.

And here is the specific provision to which I desire to call attention:

> In all the other cases before mentioned the Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction, both as to law and fact, with such exceptions and under such regulations as the Congress shall make.

So that I say Congress has perfect authority to make regulations governing the issuance of injunctions, to make regulations as to their suspension, supersession, or to make any regulations limiting jurisdiction or power which the Congress may see fit to make. It is a blanket authority absolutely, and I am sure that cannot be denied by anyone.

Mr. President, I have made this reference merely to show that the argument of my esteemed and very able friend the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] is not at all well taken, and I do not believe the Senate will uphold it.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. As supporting the position of the Senator from Tennessee, I call his attention to the case of the Francis Wright, decided in One Hundred and Fifth United States Reports. The Senator has quoted from the Constitution where it is provided that judicial power shall extend to all questions in law and equity, enumerating among the cases admiralty cases. In the case which I have cited Congress took away the right of appeal where the facts were involved. Although the Constitution provides that the judicial power shall extend to law and fact in admiralty cases, the Congress of the United States took away the right of appeal affecting the facts in admiralty cases, and the Supreme Court of the United States upheld that limitation on the jurisdiction.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I did not hear all of the Senator's argument, and I apologize for asking him about something which he may have already covered.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator well knows he may ask me any question.

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course, the Senator is not opposed to the granting of injunctions in proper cases.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no.

Mr. TYDINGS. What he desires is to have the Government notified.

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to have the Government notified, and I want a limitation upon the granting of preliminary or interlocutory injunctions until the Supreme Court can pass upon the matter of constitutionality.

Mr. TYDINGS. I sympathize with the Senator's objective, but let me point out that quite often if the injunction could not be granted until the Supreme Court had an opportunity of passing upon the facts, it would be equivalent to depriving an individual of his rights.

Mr. McKELLAR. While I have not examined all the cases involving injunctions which went to the Supreme Court—I do not think anyone can do that—I have examined most of them, and my recollection is that several of them alleging irreparable injury did not make a case of irreparable injury. The suit involving the Agricultural Adjustment Act, which was brought to recover a processing tax, was, in my judgment, an attack on one of the greatest laws ever passed by the Congress, a law that did more toward relieving the country from the depression and restoring prosperity in the 2 years and a litttle more it was in force than any other law ever passed by the Congress, notwithstanding the fact that it was held unconstitutional.

Mr. TYDINGS. I sympathize with the Senator's objective. I am merely trying to elicit some information. I cannot at the moment cite a case which I would like to present to the Senator, but I will assume one. Let us assume that the Government decreed that it wished to build a Federal highway across the State of Tennessee. Let us suppose that that highway was planned so as to go through the Senator's property in such a way that he would not be compensated, that his property would be taken without due process of law; that men came upon the property and proceeded to tear it up before they had a deed to it. Does the Senator mean to say that in such a case there would be no right of injunction until the Supreme Court of the United States had ruled upon the case, an act of Congress being involved?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator has cited a case which touches what was one of the specialties of my practice when I was actively engaged at the bar. I suppose I have tried almost as many condemnation cases as any lawyer has, and I do not recall ever knowing of a condemnation suit where there was any irreparable damage. The damage could always be compensated for. It is a well-understood principle that a citizen cannot stand in the way of a great public work. For instance, I may have a home to which I am greatly attached, but if the Government in its wisdom sees fit to use that home, or a part of that home, for public purposes, it ought to have the right and it does have the right to condemn that home; and all the Constitution requires is that just compensation be given me for my home. The jury can take into consideration, in fixing the damages, that the home has some peculiar value to me as the owner, of course, but the Government may for public purposes take my home.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator misunderstood me. I did not mean that the condemnation proceedings had been instituted in the case I presented. I am assuming that agents of the Government are going upon the land and taking possession of it before the condemnation proceedings are begun, and that they are starting to dig on the land. What is my remedy if I do not petition for an injunction?

Mr. McKELLAR. It may be all right for the Senator to get an injunction upon the facts he cites, but it would not be necessary to allege that an act of Congress was unconstitutional and invalid to get such an injunction.

Mr. TYDINGS. Suppose the highway were being constructed in pursuance of an act of Congress; how would I protect my property? The case is not well taken, but I am assuming that there must be hundreds of conditions, which do not come to me for the moment, where the right of injunction might lie. The Senator would want the right preserved in such cases, just as the rest of us would. As I understand the Senator's argument, his primary concern deals with governmental undertakings through agencies of the Federal Government.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is the present case, but I think it should apply to all cases where an act of Congress is alleged to be invalid, and where the prayer of the bill is to set it aside, and in the meantime grant an injunction prohibiting its enforcement.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am afraid that if the complainant had to go to the Supreme Court in such a case as I have suggested, and in the meantime the company or the contractor should go ahead and tear down buildings and dig up land, even if he won in the Supreme Court, that would not restore his buildings.

Mr. McKELLAR. It might not restore the buildings, but the complainant could not keep the Government from taking his building anyway if it desired to use it for a public purpose and the Congress had authorized the taking of it for that purpose.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; he could, except under due process of law.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Government would have to take it under due process of law. Let me make this suggestion: I have examined the various cases which have actually been carried to the Supreme Court, and none of them suggested the extreme case to which the Senator refers.

Mr. TYDINGS. There is no doubt in the world that the right of injunction has been greatly abused, and I am with the Senator in desiring to throw safeguards about it; but the Senator from Idaho in his remarks a few days ago made use of an old English saying—that a man's home is his castle, and although the winds can enter it from all four directions, the king cannot enter it without due process of law. I do not wish to vote for a modification of the right to obtain an injunction which will deny to an individual the right to protect his property, and that is the only remedy he has where there is a show of force of a powerful government coming on his land and appropriating it without any reference to due process of law. In such case, the only thing the owner can do is to get an injunction.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I stated to the Senator from Colorado, who brought up the same matter in a little different form, if an amendment will meet the question in the Senator's mind, I should be very glad to accept such an amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I wish to point out that the able Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] some 2 or 3 weeks ago introduced a bill looking toward remedying the abuse of the injunctive power, and the able Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], not only at this session of Congress but in the last session, introduced a bill to provide that when an inferior court declares some Federal law to be beyond the power of Congress an appeal shall be taken directly to the Supreme Court.

Let me read and show how nearly the minds of those two Senators meet the mind of the President on this subject. In his message of February 5 the President said, among other things:

> I recommend that the Congress provide that no decision, injunction, judgment, or decree on any constitutional question be promulgated by any Federal court without previous and ample notice to the Attorney General and an opportunity for the United States to present evidence and be heard.

Continuing, he said:

> This is to prevent court action on the constitutionality of acts of Congress in suits between private individuals—

As the Senator from Maryland pointed out—

> where the Government is not a party to the suit, without giving opportunity to the Government of the United States to defend the law of the land.

That seems to me to be a statesmanlike proposition for reform. For example, a law is enacted by Congress, and a district court in Tennessee decides that the statute is unconstitutional, while district courts in Arizona, Kentucky, and other States say it is constitutional. There may be 20 courts in various parts of the country deciding the law is unconstitutional; others deciding that it is not. Surely, in the interest of uniformity in the administration and enforcement of the law, the Attorney General should be notified so that he could represent the Government in such a case to the end that there might be uniformity.

Mr. President, what I now say may astonish Senators. Not in our day, but in an earlier time, a proposal was seriously made—and it was not at all ridiculous—that whenever the validity of any law of Congress was challenged the Congress should employ an attorney to represent Congress to defend the act. I do not favor such a procedure. The Department of Justice is the appropriate agency to take such action. Indeed, Mr. President, no longer ago than 10 days a judge, who had been impeached and the order of judgment entered by the Senate, filed an application for a writ of certiorari in the Supreme Court of the United States, and the Senate Committee on the Judiciary instructed their chairman to communicate with the Attorney General and ascertain if the Attorney General intended to resist the motion for writ of certiorari, and further instructed their chairman that if the Attorney General did not resist the motion the Senate would consider employing an attorney for that purpose; whereupon the Department of Justice advised that it was assigning an attorney of the Department to resist that application.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, as I understand, the recommendation that the Senator read does not deny the right of injunction?

Mr. ASHURST. It does not.

Mr. TYDINGS. It throws proper safeguards around that right?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. It limits the jurisdiction and power.

Mr. ASHURST. The President makes a further recommendation:

> I also earnestly recommend that in cases in which any court of first instance determines a question of constitutionality the Congress provide that there shall be a direct and immediate appeal to the Supreme Court, and that such cases take precedence over all other matters pending in that Court. Such legislation will, I am convinced, go far to alleviate the inequality, uncertainty, and delay in the disposition of vital questions of constitutionality arising under our fundamental law.

On that point let me say that in the last Congress the able Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] introduced a bill providing almost exactly what the President has now suggested. Indeed the able Senators seem to have horoscoped the situation and introduced the bill before the President made the recommendation. That bill is now before the Senate Committee on the Judiciary and a subcommittee thereof has been appointed to consider it. I do not think it is necessary for me to give assurances, but I take the liberty to say that the Committee on the Judiciary will give attention to these proposed bills.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank the Senator very much.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, whose name is Jehovah, on this day of olden time Thou didst hear and consider the penetential prayers of Thy earthly Zion. O Lord, our Father and Redeemer, hear us and let us behold Thy face in loving mercy. Put out all our misdeeds, cast us not away from Thy presence, take not Thy Holy Spirit from us. Let us rejoice in Thy glory and rest in hope eternal. In Thy presence is fullness of joy, at Thy right hand are pleasures for evermore. We rejoice that whatever there is in holiness, in nobility, in patience, and whatever there is in heroism among men cometh from our universal Father. We pray that we may not be fearful to be spent for a life higher than the body and nobler than the flesh. Through Christ our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

REFERENCE OF H. R. 4288

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Agriculture be discharged from further consideration of the bill (H. R. 4288) to authorize the purchase and distribution of products of the fishing industry, introduced February 3, 1937, and that the bill be referred to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

This is agreeable to the Committee on Agriculture, I may say; but I promised the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES], chairman of that committee, to make the statement that some question of jurisdiction might arise, and that it would be with the understanding that if this request were granted it would not establish a parliamentary precedent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER. Under a special order of the House heretofore made, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAMNECK] is recognized for 45 minutes.

Mr. LAMNECK. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, I want you to believe me when I say that the subject I am to present to you is to my way of thinking the most important problem that it has ever been my duty to consider. I further desire to say that I hope and pray that the House of Representatives can consider the subject by forgetting entirely their political affiliations or any other contacts which might interfere with considering the problem on its merits.

We have reached a crossroad in American history. The course we pursue in the very near future, in my humble judgment, will depend on whether or not we are to continue our republican form of Government. If we go one route, it can be preserved. If we go the opposite direction, we may have communism or fascism. Our forefathers fought and died to create and preserve our form of government and the institutions created thereunder. I am sure there is not a Member of the House who would favor any ism, now known in the world, that applies to government.

Our plan has produced a citizenship and a society that has never been equaled in recorded history. Under it we are guaranteed an opportunity for life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. We have under it the highest standard of living in the world. We enjoy greater freedom than the citizens of any other nation. We have greater opportunities for development—spiritually and materially. In fact, the men and women of America are kings unto themselves. Why change?

Where is there a form of government that you would prefer to what you now have? Would you want a Hitler, a Mussolini, or a Stalin government? I am sure you would not.

If we permit a destruction of the Supreme Court, along the lines recently suggested, we may have a system similar to what I have referred to and perhaps something worse.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present. I think all the Members of the House should be here to listen to this speech.

Mr. LAMNECK. I would rather not have a call of the House at this time. While I think every Member of the House ought to hear this, if they are not here, it is not my fault.

Mr. RICH. If the gentleman does not wish to have a quorum here, Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. LAMNECK. As I see it, the Supreme Court has been the one branch of Government that has not permitted the legislative or the executive branches of government to take away from the citizen any rights he may possess under the Constitution.

Under our system we are supposed to have an executive, legislative, and judicial branch of government, separate and distinct, each one under the Constitution charged with specific duties. The executive is supposed to enforce the laws, the Congress to make them, and the judiciary to interpret them when called upon to do so.

Let us remove all the camouflage, sweep away the cobwebs, put the cards on the table, face up, so that they can be seen, and consider all the ramifications of the proposal recently made. In doing so let us remember that as Americans we are interested only in preserving this Republic and the institutions which made it great.

Before going into the merits of the proposal I want to ask the Members of the House seriously and in all candor how much you, as individuals, have to do in shaping the legislation passed by the House of Representatives? I will answer by saying that you have absolutely no more to do with passing important legislation than if you were not in Washington. I will say further that no important legislation, except the soldiers' bonus bill, has been passed during my 6 years here that did not have the approval of the Chief Executive, no matter what its merit. I defy contradiction on this statement, and I believe if I had the time I could prove this to you beyond the shadow of a doubt. No doubt those of you who were here in the Seventy-fourth Congress recall the President's letter to the chairman of the subcommittee of the Ways and Means Committee to not permit the question of the constitutionality of a bill to interfere with its passage, or words to that effect. This bill was passed, declared unconstitutional, and is now before the Congress, eager and ready for the second round of its legislative career, and it might amaze you to know that some very substantial Members, who are noted lawyers, are sponsoring its passage.

If all important legislation is prepared, in fact, by the executive branch of the Government, or its representatives and associates, and if no legislation can be passed except with the approval of the Executive, what function do we perform? Why should we have the legislative branch of Government if my statement is true?

Let me ask the new Members, What part have you played in passing the legislation that has been enacted in this Congress? Do you feel in your own heart that you had anything to do with it? If you do, you have a greater imagination than I have. About the only time the new Members are consulted at all—and I dare say a considerable number of the older Members—is when we have a Speaker and a leader to elect. The Speaker and the leader, you know, are important assets to an executive branch of Government, whose desire it is to dominate the framing of legislation and to dictate its passage.

I noticed in the papers a day or two ago, when the Supreme Court proposal was announced, that the leadership of the House and Senate told the President that the bill would pass. Why did they give such a promise? Because they know by past experience that they had been able to deliver on every piece of legislation, with the exception that I noted.

Who is supposed to do the voting on legislation? Is it the leadership or is it the Members of the House representing the people? Think over your legislative experience; ask yourself whether or not you are one four-hundred-and-thirty-fifth part of the legislative branch or whether you are just a figurehead.

As I see it, we have permitted the executive branch, through our leaders, who are subservient to his dictation, to do our voting for us. That is the reason we are called "rubber stamps", and that is why the people of this country have lost their respect for the legislative branch, and I will say it is not without justification.

How long will we permit the executive branch of government to do our legislating for us? I hope the time has arrived when we will meet this challenge to the usurping of our powers and duties and serve notice that we intend to insist that the Executive occupy his position; that the judiciary shall occupy its position, and that the legislative branch of government will do the job the Constitution intended it to do. By taking this firm step we can maintain the American form of government for the future. By doing our job we can balance the Budget. We can decentralize government. We can restore to States their rights, but we cannot do it by permitting the Executive to do our voting when his opinion is not in conformity with ours.

The judicial and executive branches of government are secondary to the legislative, and, in fact, if we did our job as was intended, they would know it at all times. The judiciary is a check on the legislative branch, and when we exceed our authority, they put us in our proper place, and if we pass a bill the President does not like, the Constitution has provided him relief by giving him the veto power. This is as it should be.

One of the great authorities on the Constitution pointed out that the provisions which permitted the Supreme Court Justices to hold office during good behavior was one of its strongest assets. He said:

> In a monarchy, it is an excellent barrier to the despotism of the prince; in a republic, it is a no less excellent barrier to the encroachments and oppressions of the representative body. And it is the best expedient which can be devised in any government, to secure a steady, upright, and impartial administration of laws.
> Whoever attentively considers the different departments of power must perceive, that in a government in which they are separated from each other, the judiciary, from the nature of its functions, will always be the least dangerous to the political rights of the Constitution, because it will be least in a capacity to annoy or injure them. The executive not only dispenses the honors but holds the sword of the community. The legislature not only commands the purse but prescribes the rules by which the duties and rights of every citizen are to be regulated. The judiciary, on the contrary, has no influence over either the sword or the purse; no direction either of the strength or of the wealth of the society; and can take no active resolution whatever. It may truly be said to have neither force nor will, but merely judgment; and must ultimately depend upon the aid of the executive arm for the efficacious exercise even of this faculty.
> It proves that the judiciary is beyond comparison, the weakest of the three departments of power, that it can never attack with success either of the other two, and that all possible care is requisite to enable it to defend itself against their attacks. It equally proves that, though individual oppression may now and then proceed from the courts of justice, the general liberty of the people can never be endangered from that quarter—I mean so long as the judiciary remains truly distinct from both the legislature and executive. For I agreed that "there is no liberty if the power of judging be not separated from the legislative and executive powers." * * * It proves, in the last place, that liberty can have nothing to fear from the judiciary alone, but would have everything to fear from its union with either of the other two departments.
> The complete independence of the courts of justice is peculiarly essential in a limited constitution * * *.

There are some who believe that the courts should have no right to pronounce legislative acts void because of the fact that it would show that the judiciary is superior to the legislative branch of government. This does not follow at all, and the only power the Supreme Court has is in declaring an act unconstitutional which is in conflict with the Constitution, and it was never intended that the legislative branch would be enabled to substitute their will in defiance of a constitutional provision.

The Constitution is a fundamental law, and the interpretation of that law is the proper and peculiar province of the Court.

All three branches of the Government have only the powers delegated by the people, and the Constitution prescribes the limitations under which each must act, and it is the function of the Supreme Court to determine whether legislative branches exceed their authority. Therefore, what excuse can we have in attempting to change the Constitution unless we present the change to the people for their consideration and approval. By adopting the Executive proposal we do change the Constitution without public approval, because the objective is to permit legislation to be called constitutional which the Supreme Court has said is not.

Again, may I repeat—and be it to our everlasting shame as elected representatives of the people—that Congress, the only branch of Government possessing the right to initiate and pass legislation, is regarded across the country as a mere "rubber stamp" of the executive branch. We are so pictured by cartoon and by editorial in the public press. We are pictured as a group of spanked schoolboys who are obedient to what they are told to do. This body, coming from the people of the various districts, is expected to reflect their will and legislate for their interests. Instead, we are told by the Central Government how we shall act.

As an American citizen, I protest against a condition which makes us the representatives and tools of the executive department when we are chosen as the agents of the people who are the lawful citizens of our districts. They are the sovereigns of this land, and in a representative government such as ours the legislative, the executive, and the judicial branches of the Government are their agents of expression and action. As Members of Congress, we are the American people assembled here—not to take orders from anybody but to convert the will of the citizens into legislation telling the executive branch of Government what to do. This House is the nearest approach of the National Government to the homes of America. The greatest guaranty of protection to those homes—the castles which no power has the right to invade without due process of law—the greatest guaranty to these homes, I repeat, is the judicial body of this Nation, crowned by the Supreme Court. This great tribunal, which has weathered the storms of a hundred and fifty years, is the one remaining bulwark of the United States of America and of that great document of a government of the people, by the people, and for the people—the Constitution of the United States of America.

It is recognized that during the past quarter of a century changes have come which have shaken the governments of the world. Many of them have fallen, and today millions of intelligent human beings are but the tools and pawns of ambitious dictators. Our own land has experienced many changes, but one branch of our Government has been the keystone of confidence. It has held the arch of our democracy in place. It is the judiciary branch, exemplified by the Supreme Court. This Court has had no selfish ambitions; it has had no campaign plans; it has had one great mission, the interpretation of the truth as set forth in the Constitution. The Supreme Court has been placed in charge of the interpreting of that great charter of our political rights as citizens. No one can successfully contend that the members of the Court have not faithfully endeavored to interpret that document.

Take note, will you please, that the one decision which most upset the executive branch of our Government was a unanimous decision, when all nine of these legal minds, selected because of their repute as great jurists, decided that the National Recovery Act was a violation of the Constitution. Does anyone have facts to show that these nine jurists were wrong or biased? Should these men be scolded or abused or coerced because they did their duty? If anything was wrong, it must have been the law or the Constitution, and therefore one or the other of them should be changed.

But what do we find? The legislative body is not asked to initiate a change in the Constitution, nor are we instructed as to wherein it is wrong. We find instead an attempt to coerce the highest tribunal of the land. At least our public press of the highest repute openly declares that the present move is an attempt to "pack" the Supreme Court. Such an attempt even in the most inferior court of our land would be repudiated by our local citizens as a travesty on justice. Are we to stand here like "fatted oxen fit only for the slaughter" and consent to see the one great bulwark of our democracy toppled over? Will we not resist such an attack, whether it be by a group of anarchists, a communistic party, a group of the aristocracy, or an individual? In the name of all that is American in our blood and ideals, we are called upon to meet a challenge to our national democratic existence. There is no partisan obligation, no class tie, no sectional sentiment, that can silence us as American citizens and representatives of the people at this time of crisis. I rise with deepest conviction for the defense of my country, believing that any move which, by coercion, removal, or packing of the Supreme Court, seeks to defeat the purposes of the Constitution, is as great a challenge as ever came to a soldier of our land in all the noble history of her battles. No court is the seat of justice if its right to free and unbiased interpretation is infringed upon or its decisions influenced by any ulterior motive or personal or partisan objective.

AGE NOT QUESTION AT ISSUE

We find ourselves faced by a peculiar situation. We are told that the advanced age of the members of the Supreme Court is a reason necessitating displacement of the present body. We are also told that there is congestion of the Court's docket and that this is a reason justifying change. The public generally does not accept these assigned reasons as the real reason, for the press has revealed to any who read the underlying factors.

Strange that age should be given as a reason for change in this day when men's lives are of longer average duration than ever before. Look at the history of our Supreme Court and review the names of those who served after 70 years of age. Even among the Chief Justices alone we may recall a distinguished panel beyond the age of 70: John Marshall, 80 years of age; Roger B. Taney, 87; Waite, 72; Fuller, 77; White, 76; Taft, 72.

For further examples of illustrious public service rendered by men of age we might even confine ourselves to the Congress of the United States, noting the Members well past threescore and ten who have come back to House and Senate by overwhelming votes of the people at the polls. It is very evident that the voters do not share the idea respecting the uselessness of our elders as statesmen and jurists.

The argument that there are congested courts indicating need of an immediate increase in the number of Supreme Court Justices seems altogether too thin to receive weight in this body. Only last month the Attorney General and the Solicitor General of the United States, in reports to this body, declared there had been a great improvement in the court calendars. It has also been shown that the calendar of the Supreme Court is in most excellent shape. Furthermore, there has been no evidence to show that more Judges would not impede rather than facilitate the working of the Court. At least it has been argued in this body that a lesser rather than a greater number here would facilitate legislation.

It is further known that there are eight Federal court vacancies at this time, some of which have been vacant for more than a year.

Every Member of this legislative body, and every other well-informed citizen as well, knows why this meddling with the Supreme Court is attempted at this time. To carry out such a policy as is proposed for the purpose of circumventing the spirit of the Constitution will leave an unremovable shadow of doubt as to the sincerity of this administration and in the minds of millions of patriotic citizens it will place a question mark after the name of everyone who supports it.

The words of Dr. Raymond Moley, once an outstanding counselor of the President, should have weight with even the most pronounced of our New Deal friends. Said Dr. Moley, after stating that if he were a Member of Congress, apart from political expediency, he could find no reason for supporting the President's plan:

> Appointment to one of the new memberships will be a very doubtful honor under the circumstances. It will imply that the appointee is chosen not primarily as a statesman capable of wise and independent action, but because of a predetermined acquiescence with whatever the President may in the future propose to an obedient Congress.

Once we who are Members of this Congress—a body which many in every community and even members of the majority party declare to be a Presidential rubber stamp—once we aid in making of the judicial branch of the Government another rubber stamp, the confidence of this Nation will be shaken as never before in its history. Once the American people lose confidence in the independence and validity of the courts, what have we left?

ATTEMPT UN-AMERICAN

There are, in my opinion, three reasons why the Members of this body, and especially those who belong to the Democratic Party, cannot vote for a measure which will despoil the Supreme Court, as the proposed action surely will do.

First, the method proposed for controlling the Supreme Court is unfair; second, it is undemocratic; third, it is un-American.

There is a provision in the Constitution itself for changing its content, and it is the only fair way—by amendment. If the people of this Nation desire that the independence and integrity of the Supreme Court be changed, if they desire to have the Executive the absolute power in the land, then let them vote upon it. The only fair way of changing the historic practices in a representative democracy is by ascertaining beyond a doubt the will of the people on this, a most fundamental change in our system.

In the following lines from the popular magazine These Times the essence of this issue from the citizen's viewpoint is well stated:

> The one check which the Constitution provides and which has stood as the people's protection against a too powerful Government, has been the Supreme Court. Citizens must not let the Executive overcome that body if we are to remain the free citizens of a democracy.
> We must have a Court free and able to interpret according to law and logic the Constitution as written, not bound to interpret it to satisfy any passing sentiment or any individual, however popular he may be at the moment. If there is to be a change in our Government, let it be a constitutional change deliberately passed upon by the citizens to whom the Republic belongs and who possess the right to decide for themselves the kind of government they desire. At the present we have a written Constitution with a Supreme Court whose responsibility it is to interpret that Constitution without fear or favor of Chief Executives, mobs, or any other force. The right to such an interpretation is the surest safeguard of the weakest citizen as it is of the mightiest capitalist. Such an instrument and interpretation furnish the most significant evidence of our freedom as Americans.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio will suspend. The gentleman from Mississippi will state his point of order.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Ohio has no right to read a magazine article without the permission of the House.

Mr. LAMNECK. I read only a quotation.

Mr. RANKIN. He should at least tell us what enemies of the administration he is reading from. Now, if the gentleman is going to read these attacks on the administration, I am going to make the point of order. At least he should tell us what magazines they are from and who wrote the articles.

Mr. LAMNECK. I read the name of the magazine from which I quoted.

Mr. RANKIN. I did not hear the gentleman read it. What magazine was it from?

Mr. LAMNECK. From the magazine These Times, published in Washington, D. C.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against reading that article into the RECORD.

Mr. LAMNECK. I have already read the portion of it I desired.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules and precedents, where an objection is made to the reading of an article such as the gentleman is reading, the matter must be submitted to the House for its determination.

Does the gentleman from Mississippi insist upon his point of order?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the gentleman from Ohio has already read the article, I withdraw the point of order for the time being.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio will proceed.

Mr. LAMNECK. What this Congress is asked to do is undemocratic. We are only a few weeks from the general elections when the President and every Member of this House was elected. Did the President announce a purpose to change the Supreme Court if reelected? He did not. When he was asked if he would make any effort to alter the Supreme Court, he was silent, but those who claimed to speak for him declared that any such inference respecting the candidate was "sinful, sinister, and utterly unfounded." If the President did have such a plan in view, he should have declared it. Thus the people might have had a chance to express an opinion upon it. The Democratic platform did not contain such a proposal. The candidate's acceptance speech did not intimate such a purpose. Now, before the inaugural scaffolding is removed, the President proposes a change which would destroy the very foundation of the faith millions of citizens have in our Government.

The people believe the Chief Executive is confident he can handle the legislative branch to seize control of the judicial branch. Can it be done? If so, then how will our democracy of 1937 differ from the autocracies and dictatorships of the Old World?

In the third place, the program to control the Supreme Court by packing it is thoroughly un-American. What could be more un-American than to give the party having interests at stake before a court power to appoint additional judges to that court? The statutes of our Federal and State Governments hold as a basic principle that no judge shall sit in legal judgment over a matter in which he has a personal interest or relationship or in which the verdict would redound to his own benefit or hurt. This goes down even to our jury system. Yet in the case before us the one who would select the judges already has an interest in the opinions which the judges he selects might pass upon. That is a violation of historic and fundamental Americanism.

This Nation was founded 148 years ago when, on the first Wednesday in March 1789, the Constitution was declared in effect. Despite the storms of the intervening years, the Nation has grown and flourished because of that document, which has been as the plan of the Great Architect for the people of this Republic. Because of its fundamental principles, serving as a guarantee of the rights of the people, they have flourished as has no other national group in all history. With a history such as is ours, have we come to the situation in the year of our Lord 1937 where we, the custodians of that unsurpassed document of government, are asked to mutilate our own birth certificate and turn the powers reserved to the legislative and judicial branches of the Government over to the control of the executive branch? If we, as representatives of a democratic people, can do this, there must be passing from our midst the spirit of George Washington, Rufus King, Robert Morris, Benjamin Franklin, Charles Carroll, James Madison, and their colleagues, who, on September 17, 1787, attached their signatures to the proposed Constitution of the United States of America.

Some things change, but the great principles of truth and human justice are as unchangeable as sun and stars. The basis of fundamental justice has not changed from the days of the Author of the Ten Commandments to this present hour. "Thou shalt not kill." "Thou shall not steal." These are as applicable in the day of the auto and the airplane as in the day of the "horse and buggy", or in the day of the chariot and camel. Likewise has remained the judging of the truth. By what authority are we to justify any act on our part that would cause us to say, "The truth shall change according to the winds that blow, or the party that is in power"? We are Americans and justice is justice, whether one party or the other is in power. As a Member of the Seventy-fifth Congress, a Democrat, elected by the free electors of my district, I cannot—under my oath to support the Constitution of the United States—use my vote in this body to take from my constituents one iota of that protection which the Supreme Court has afforded them and their fathers for 148 years. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, in concluding I want to read a short three-line statement of George Washington on this subject:

> The spirit of encroachment tends to consolidate the powers of all departments in one and thus create out of the form of government a real despotism.

Mr. Speaker, I appeal to the Members as citizens, as Americans, and as Members of the House of Representatives, whether Republicans or Democrats, to give this subject of the Supreme Court the greatest consideration, because if you wreck it you are wrecking the American form of government.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMNECK. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. I trust that the membership of this body will examine very carefully the remarks of the gentleman now having the floor. He has yielded to me for the purpose of making a few supporting remarks to his splendid speech.

Mr. Speaker, living within the presence of the fine things which the President has accomplished, it is difficult to withhold from him a power which he wants, but his recommendation that the membership of the Supreme Court be increased from 9 to 15, thereby enabling him, through willing appointees, to change the meaning of our basic laws and our whole form of government, asks for something which no one man in all this world ought to enjoy.

The recommendation constitutes the most terrible threat to constitutional government that has arisen in the entire history of the country. It is nationalism with a vengeance, and, carried into effect, would mean the end of the doctrine of States' rights. In the sense that it makes possible change in the meaning of the Constitution by legislative and executive power, it violates the principle of the sovereignty of the people. It would upset our whole system of checks and balances, establish executive control over the judiciary, and destroy the majesty of the law. A political and terrorized court is no tribunal of justice, and with the independence of the Supreme Court destroyed and it made a pliable tool in the hands of the Executive, ours becomes a government of men instead of a government of laws. My sense of political responsibility and political morality impels me to resist. I pray God that no such calamity may ever befall this country that we all love as the vesting of all power of government in the hands of any one man. [Applause.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes. The address of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAMNECK] should be answered. I could probably do so under a question of personal privilege, but I would rather take 5 minutes to answer this vicious attack that has been made on the President of the United States and on the Congress. It should not go unchallenged.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is Calendar Wednesday. I do not know how far this thing will go, but we have two very important bills that the gentleman is interested in, and I believe the rest of the Members of the House are interested in. I do not see how I can refrain from objecting.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, these attacks that have been made on the Congress and on the President of the United States are just as important to the American people as the passage of a law permitting judges to retire at the age of 70. I hope the gentleman will not object. I think I would have the right to address the House under a question of personal privilege. I have never heard such a vicious attack made on the Membership of this House as has been made here today, and I cannot pass by the statement that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] intimating that the President of the United States would place "willing appointees" on that bench, "to change the meaning of our basic laws and our whole form of government", as said by the gentleman from Georgia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I cannot yield on this matter. My friend, the gentleman from Mississippi, will recognize if I yield to him I will have to yield to other gentlemen, and the first thing we know the whole day is gone. Mr. Speaker, I object.

THE FUTURE OF THE GREAT PLAINS—REPORT OF GREAT PLAINS COMMITTEE (H. DOC. NO. 144)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying documents, referred to the Committee on Agriculture and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress the report of the Great Plains Committee under the title "The Future of the Great Plains."

The report indicates clearly that the problem of the Great Plains is not merely one of relief of a courageous and energetic people who have been stricken by several years of drought during a period of economic depression. It is much more fundamental than that. Depression and drought have only accentuated a situation which has been long developing. The problem is one of arresting the decline of an agricultural economy not adapted to the climatic conditions because of lack of information and understanding at the time of settlement, and of readjusting that economy in the light of later experience and of scientific information now available.

The settlers of the Plains brought with them agricultural practices developed in the more humid regions from which they came. By historic circumstance the period of settlement was generally one of rainfall above the average, and, although water was known to be scarce, these practices then appeared to be suitable. The long-run experience, however, has disclosed that the rainfall of the area hovers around, and, for considerable periods, falls below the critical point at which it is possible to grow crops by the agricultural methods common to humid regions. A new economy must be developed which is based on the conservation and effective utilization of all the water available, especially that which falls as rain and snow; an economy which represents generally a more rational adjustment of the organization of agriculture and cropping plans and methods to natural conditions.

The whole subject of drought on the Great Plains dovetails into the studies made by the National Resources Committee in the larger aspect of public works planning. Previous and current studies of land and water problems have been undertaken on a Nation-wide basis. In this report they have been re-worked and applied by the Great Plains Committee in cooperation with other Federal agencies and with State and regional planning agencies as a component part of our desire to develop a program of constructive action for the drought area.

Whatever program is adopted must be cooperative and will require complementary lines of action by the Federal Government, State governments, and all the citizens of the region individually. Each has material interests at stake and can no longer afford to defer constructive action; each has moral responsibility for unwitting contributions to the causes of the present situation; and especially each has responsibility for undertaking lines of action essential to effectiveness of action by the others.

The problem is one that can be solved, but the solution will take time. Therefore a policy should be determined, a long-run program formulated, and execution begun without undue delay.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 10, 1937.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

The SPEAKER. Today is Calendar Wednesday. The clerk will call the roll of committees.

RETIREMENT OF JUSTICES OF THE SUPREME COURT

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas (when the Committee on the Judiciary was called). Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Judiciary, I call up the bill (H. R. 2518) to provide for retirement of Justices of the Supreme Court.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2518) to provide for retirement of Justices of the Supreme Court, with Mr. LANHAM in the chair.

The first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I am going to make a brief statement explanatory of this bill and hope then to yield myself to questions propounded by Members to whom I may not have made the provisions of the bill clear.

Those of you who have examined the language of the bill have discovered that it proposes to extend to Justices of the Supreme Court the same right to retire, instead of resign, which the Congress in 1919 extended to judges of the circuit courts of appeals and of the district courts.

There are a few matters I think it would be very well to clear up. Many times you read in the papers statements to the effect that it is proposed to retire these judges on full pay or a pension, or similar statements. This bill does not at all deal with the matter of pay of these judges. The matter of pay of a given Federal judge cannot be reduced by Congress. It lies beyond the control of the Congress. The fact that Federal judges shall draw compensation during their life unless removed by impeachment, is fixed in the Constitution, and during their respective lives cannot ever be reduced, and we have nothing to do with it. We will not touch that question today. Congress will never touch that question as long as the provisions of the Constitution remain as they are.

This leaves just one question and that is whether or not when a Justice of the Supreme Court of 10 years' service and who has reached the point in physical condition which requires that he be given lighter work and the public business requires that a more vigorous man be put on the bench, he be permitted to retire from his regular duties and be assigned to such work?

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Texas yield for a pertinent question at this particular point?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. COX. The bill states that the Chief Justice may call upon an inactive Justice to perform such judicial duties as may be assigned to him. In such an instance would the inactive Justice be called upon to sit with the active members of the Supreme Court and have a vote in determining questions before the Court?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I appreciate that question being asked now, if there is any doubt about it. The answer is no. The Justice would retire from the Supreme Court bench and would be subject to assignment only in the circuits, and may serve even as a circuit judge under assignment. I think the language makes it perfectly clear, but in order to be doubly sure that that question would not arise in any future construction, the committee in its report, as the gentleman will observe, states the legislative purpose of the bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me to ask a very elementary question and one which I am somewhat ashamed to ask?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from New York.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. What happens to the Justice who reaches 70 and has not served 10 years?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. He cannot retire under this bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. In other words, if by any chance he were appointed at 69, he could serve 10 years without retiring or until he reached the age of 79.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I may suggest to my friend that that difficulty was recognized by the committee, but what we have done, may I say to my friend from New York, is to apply to the Justices of the Supreme Court exactly the arrangement which since 1919 has applied to other Federal judges, which arrangement has been tested in this country since 1919, and apparently not much difficulty has been encountered with it.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Some States do not have as lengthy a requirement as 10 years; for instance, some States have 5 years, and it all depends on whether you are taking the 70 years as the focal point or the 10 years of service and 70 years as the focal point.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is right. There are some difficulties about it, but the committee thought the best thing to do was to go along with the law as we have it applicable to the other Federal judges.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for one further question?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. COX. May I have confirmation from the gentleman of the impression I have as to this measure, that it is something his committee had worked out prior to the committee having any knowledge of the recommendation that came from the President a few days ago?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. This bill was first introduced about 2 years ago. As I have explained, we have an unusual situation with regard to the Federal judges. We have an arrangement under which district judges and judges of the circuit court of appeals can be given lighter duties when they have reached the age of 70 and have served 10 years.

By the way, it is purely voluntary retirement proposed here, and that is true with regard to the other judges under existing law.

The reason I did not offer a bill sooner, and I imagine the reason no other Member of Congress did not offer a bill sooner, in an effort to work out an arrangement under which these Justices of the Supreme Court could separate themselves from service on the Supreme Bench and be given lighter service, was the inherent difficulties pertaining to their office. Like everything else, when you work it out you wonder why you did not do it sooner. Two years ago I introduced practically this same bill.

I will not go into the details of how it happened, but it was defeated in the House.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. How does that bill differ from this?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. It is practically the same bill, except that this Congress is more intelligent than the last one. [Laughter.]

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Can the gentleman tell me offhand the date that that bill was brought in and considered?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I have not that in mind.

Mr. CELLER. It was in 1935.

Mr. MICHENER. March 6, 1935.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. CULKIN. In regard to the age of 70, the gentleman recalls that Judge Holmes was 91 and was powerful and alert. Does the gentleman believe that there is any arbitrary rule on longevity?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Would this be an answer to the gentleman? Under this bill retirement is entirely voluntary. If this bill had been in operation at that time it would not have forced Judge Holmes to retire.

Mr. CULKIN. Does not the gentleman think that this legislation should be deferred until promised legislation has been considered?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No; unless somebody wants to gum up the game. We have a concrete proposition here as to whether or not these Justices of the Supreme Court, some of whom are getting along in years and some of them probably not very well, should have the same opportunity of lighter service, given under identical circumstances to all other Federal judges, constitutional judges, and surely should not the Government have the same chance to put a more vigorous man on the job if the Justice voluntarily retires, just as is the case under existing law with reference to all other judges?

Mr. CULKIN. I am compelled to believe that the presentation of this measure at this time is a part of the strategy of the White House for the purpose of working its will on the judiciary of the country.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Then may I help to relieve the gentleman's suspicion. I introduced this bill 2 years ago. I introduced this bill at the beginning of this session. This bill had been reported favorably by the Committee on the Judiciary before the President sent his message. Does that help the gentleman any?

Mr. CULKIN. Oh, I am familiar with the history of it. But I also know the history of the gentleman in the White House.

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. WILCOX. The gentleman may have covered this before, but if he has it would not do any damage to emphasize it again. Under this bill do I understand that the retirement of the Justices is entirely voluntary and that it could not be forced?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. There is no attempt at compulsory retirement.

Mr. WILCOX. It must be voluntary on the part of the Justice.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is right.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I read from the bill the following language:

> The Justices of the Supreme Court are hereby granted the same rights and privileges with regard to retiring, instead of resigning, granted to judges other than Justices of the Supreme Court by section 260 of the Judicial Code.

I would like to know, and no doubt many Members of the House would like to know, without taking the trouble of looking up the statute referred to, what the retiring privileges of members of the circuit and district courts are.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Under existing law the other judges referred to are privileged to retire instead of resigning when they have reached the age of 70 years and have served 10 years on the bench.

Mr. KELLER. And how about the Supreme Court Justices?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The Supreme Court Justices under this bill will have the same right to retire instead of resigning when they have reached the age of 70 and have served 10 years on the bench.

Mr. KELLER. But now?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. They cannot do that now.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. SPENCE. What effect has this law had on the circuit and district judges with reference to their taking advantage of it?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Quite a number of them have retired, and I understand they are pretty useful in their respective districts and circuits in doing light work. If I may use a homely illustration—and about all I ever learned I learned on the farm—when I was a boy if my father had a horse that he had to feed all of its life anyway, and that horse got too old to do the work of a regular horse cultivating the crop, he would not keep him in the field merely because he had to feed him to the hurt of the crop and the waste of a good hand's time. What he would do, as a man of practical common sense, would be to take that horse which he had to feed anyhow and work him a little around the garden and use him to draw up a little wood and put a good husky horse out there in the field with somebody to work it. That is all that we are asking you to do, and if you have as much sense as a good old-fashioned farmer has, you will do it. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. I do not think the gentleman meant that exactly.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. What does the gentleman think I meant?

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman indicated that that is what we are going to do. I am in favor of this bill.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Then, interrupting the gentleman, whatever he thinks I ought to have said, if he is in favor of the bill, then that is what I meant. [Laughter.]

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman from Texas left the impression that we are going to take some of these men off the bench and retire them and put somebody else in their places. We are not doing anything except one thing, and that is we are giving to the Supreme Court Justices the same right of retirement under exactly the same conditions, that all other Federal judges retire under now.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is a correct statement.

Mr. MICHENER. There is a lot of difference in that from taking somebody off the bench.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I appreciate the correction of my friend, but the reason I had to make a little variation was that the horses we used to have did not have the sense to make a strong argument and know exactly when they were getting too old. [Laughter.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. MAY. I think the gentleman's bill goes a little bit further than the statement of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER]. Under the language of the bill they may retire and then be called upon by the Chief Justice and by him authorized to perform such judicial duties in any judicial circuit, "including those of a circuit justice in such circuit, as such retired Justice may be willing to undertake."

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Exactly.

Mr. MAY. Does not that give to the Chief Justice, whoever he may be, additional and dangerous powers to those which he now possesses?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Not at all. The Chief Justice assigns the former Justice to perform such duties in the circuit as the Chief Justice thinks he is able to perform and as the retiring Justice is willing to undertake.

Mr. MAY. That is, he does that now?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. He will under this bill. In other words, to make it clear, when a justice shall have retired, instead of having resigned, and there is a situation in a circuit that needs some temporary assistance, and the Chief Justice thinks this retired Justice can do the work, and the retired Justice is willing to undertake it, then the Chief Justice may assign him, and he has a status in that district which enables him to discharge the judicial duties assigned to him.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. HEALEY. The Supreme Court Justices may now perform duties in the circuits?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes. That is rather interesting. I appreciate that statement from my colleague from Massachusetts, because, as a matter of fact, the Supreme Court Justices now have two duties, strictly speaking. One is the duty to sit on the Supreme Court bench and the other is the duty to go on circuit, but as the business of the bench has increased, of course, the other business has fallen away.

Mr. O'TOOLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. O'TOOLE. The gentleman from Texas mentioned the story of a horse that had grown old in service.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. O'TOOLE. Would it not have been more practical to shoot the horse?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The gentleman would not have thought so if he had been the horse. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to use any further time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman may reserve the remainder of his time.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. PARSONS. What would be the salary or retirement pay of the Supreme Court Justices? What would be their pay if they were summoned back to work?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. It is fixed in the Constitution, and we cannot touch it. It is just the same. In other words, under the Constitution, we employ these men with a contract to give them that salary, at least not less, as long as they live. We cannot touch it. It is not involved in this bill.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. HALLECK. I appreciate the fairness and frankness with which the chairman has explained this bill. There is one thing about it I would like to inquire about, if it is proper. Am I correct in assuming that there is no implication in this bill, or there would be none in its passage, of a suggestion to any of the members of the Supreme Court that they should retire?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not think so.

Mr. HALLECK. There is no such implication?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. You cannot force them off.

Mr. HALLECK. I recognize that; but is it the attitude of the chairman that the passage of this bill should not be taken as a suggestion from us that they should retire?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I would not presume to suggest to the Justices of the Supreme Court what implication should be drawn.

Mr. Chairman, I do want to be fair about this matter and make it as clear as I can. I introduced this bill 2 years ago. Why? Because some of these gentlemen were getting older, and the Congress had given to all of the other members of the Federal judiciary the right to retire instead of resigning. These gentlemen over here are as good men, they are as faithful men as district judges and circuit court judges. They like to hold on. They like to be judges. These district judges like to be judges yet. They are permitted to be and to do lighter work. It is unfair to these men on the bench to give a privilege to their colleagues on other benches and deny it to these men who are giving their lives on that bench. Besides, keeping interest must be considered. [Applause.]

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Are district judges paid for life now the same as Supreme Court Judges?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. All judges are paid for life. That is fixed by the Constitution. This Congress could legislate from now until doomsday, and it could not disturb that fixation.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. RAYBURN. That is not quite the situation, is it? What my colleague intends to say it would appear to me, is that whatever the salary of a judge is, we cannot change it during his life.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is what I mean. Congress fixes the salary, but when that salary is fixed, it may not be reduced during the life of that judge.

Mr. RAYBURN. But the Congress does fix the salary.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes. That is what I meant.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. HEALEY. Section 1, article II, of the Constitution provides that there shall be no diminution in the compensation of a judge.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is right.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. If a Justice of the Supreme Court resigns, then he would receive no salary after that at all?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. He is not a judge. His salary would depend upon a statute instead of upon the Constitution.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. That is right.

Now, is it not true that Congress could not provide for compulsory retirement at 70 or 72 or any other age without a constitutional amendment?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. They are judges for life, subject only to the condition of "good behavior."

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. SPENCE. Can the gentleman tell us why the Supreme Court Justices were not included?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I tried to do that awhile ago. The gentleman will excuse me for not repeating, as I must not occupy more time now.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GUYER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Kansas rise?

Mr. GUYER. I yield myself 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman opposed to the measure?

Mr. GUYER. I am.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 1 hour and he yields himself 5 minutes.

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Chairman, first I want to take this opportunity to tell the House what a happy family the Committee on the Judiciary is. There is no committee that has less politics, less partisanship, less rancor than the Committee on the Judiciary. That is due to the fact that we have as our chairman one of the most diplomatic, most tactful men there is in this Congress or any place else. [Applause.] For that reason we all love and respect him. He has steered us through "green pastures and by the still waters", through the troubled waters of birth control and rape of the Supreme Court without any commotion whatever.

I voted against this bill 2 years ago. I am not bitterly opposed to it, I do not think it is a vicious bill, but the reason I voted against it 2 years ago, as I said at that time, was that I believed it was an invitation to the Members of the Supreme Court to resign, that it made it easy for them to resign, and I did not want them to do so. I believe that today.

We never had a better balanced Supreme Court in the history of this country than we have at this time [applause], and if there is any inducement to resign, I do not want them to. I remember that a judge of our Supreme Court of Kansas at one time was traveling in the State of Washington. A man approached him and asked: "Mr. Justice, do you drink?"

The judge replied: "That all depends on whether you are gathering statistics or giving an invitation." [Laughter.]

I do not want to give them an invitation to resign. We have a great Supreme Court which has upheld the stainless record of this Court. I want it to remain the way it is.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HANCOCK].

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much that this bill comes up so early in the session. I think it is a very unfortunate coincidence that it follows so closely on the heels of the President's message of February 5. As the chairman of the Judiciary Committee has so clearly stated, however, there is only one object in view when this bill is presented to the House, and that is to make it possible for the members of the Supreme Court to retire on exactly the same terms that govern the retirement of other Federal judges. The proposal is not new. It has been considered for several years, and this particular bill was reported to the House before the President's message was read.

It has been the law for a great many years that members of the Supreme Court may resign and draw their full salaries, but other Federal judges may retire and draw their full salaries after serving 10 years and reaching the age of 70. The difference is between resigning and retiring. If a member resigns from the Supreme Court, he is no longer a member of the Court and his salary may be reduced or eliminated entirely by act of Congress. If, however, the judge retires, as provided in this bill, he remains a member of the Court and his salary cannot be disturbed, because section 1 of article III of the Constitution prohibits it.

This is all that is involved in this bill. It may be argued that this is an inducement or an enticement or temptation held out to the Supreme Court to take advantage of retirement. No such inference can legitimately be drawn. All any member of the Court has to gain by the pending bill is the assurance that when, as, and if he of his own volition decides to retire his retirement salary cannot be disturbed. That is all that is accomplished or sought to be accomplished by this bill. Any other implication upon it can only be based on suspicion and coincidence.

If it were a logical inference that this were an attack upon the Court, I would oppose it as strongly as I know how.

Millions of Americans all over this country would protest if that were so. I feel that the public has stated its sentiment unmistakably in the last few days. It fervently hopes that the Members of the Supreme Court will be spared to us for many years, each one of them. They want them to be "tenacious" of their health, bodily and mentally, and of the high offices they now hold. The people have shown very clearly, I believe, that they will not tolerate any move to drive the Supreme Court one inch from the position it now occupies as an independent and coordinate branch of the Government.

The argument that this is a move to enable the President to pack the Supreme Court cannot be sustained. When that issue comes up we will meet it. I am convinced—perhaps the hope is the father of the conviction—that any such attempt will be defeated. This is not an attack, it is a protection to the Court; and I, for one, and I believe most of my colleagues on this side of the aisle, too, feel that the bill should be passed. The members of the Supreme Court are entitled to the same protection that the other Federal judges enjoy. [Applause.]

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GUYER. I yield.

Mr. McLEAN. This bill would amend the Judicial Code, title 28, section 375. The second paragraph of that section reads as follows:

> In the event any circuit judge, or district judge, having so held a commission or commissions at least 10 years continuously and having attained the age of 70 years as aforesaid, shall nevertheless remain in office, and not resign or retire as aforesaid, the President, if he finds any such judge is unable to discharge efficiently all the duties of his office by reason of mental or physical disability of permanent character, may, when necessary for the efficient dispatch of business, appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, an additional circuit judge of the circuit or district judge of the district to which such disabled judge belongs. And the judge so retiring voluntarily, or whose mental or physical condition caused the President to appoint an additional judge shall be held and treated as if junior in commission to the remaining judges of said court, who shall, in the order of the seniority of their respective commissions, exercise such powers and perform such duties as by law may be incident to seniority.

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Chairman, I yielded to the gentleman for a question only.

Mr. McLEAN. I am about to propound my question. I ask the committee whether in their judgment there is any possibility of the paragraph I have read being read into the law if this bill we are now considering is enacted.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GUYER. I yield.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The section the gentleman just read does not refer to retiring instead of resigning, if the gentleman will notice the language. The next paragraph has to do with retirement instead of resigning; and the gentleman will notice in this connection that this bill merely gives to the Justices of the Supreme Court the same right to retire instead of resign now granted to other Federal judges.

Mr. McLEAN. If the gentleman will permit, I think he has a different paragraph in mind.

I am looking at the second paragraph of section 375, where the following words appear:

> Shall nevertheless remain in office and not resign or retire.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The gentleman has before him title 28 of the Code.

Mr. McLEAN. I have before me the Annotated Code, title 28, chapter 10.

The point is this, if the gentleman will permit: It seems to me this provision is so much like the legislation asked in the recent message of the President that there is the possibility of statutory construction whereby that provision could be read into the bill before us and become the law of the land without direct action by Congress. The reorganization of the United States Supreme Court is of such importance it would be much safer and wiser to allow this matter to go over or postpone its further consideration until such time as we may have determined the matter of enforced retirement and an increase in the personnel of that body.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. May I say to the gentleman that the Judiciary Committee carefully examined this matter, and on that particular point, at least, there was not the slightest uncertainty that this bill deals solely with the question of the right to retire instead of resigning, and does not deal with any power on the part of the President.

Mr. McLEAN. It is not the intention of the committee, directly or indirectly, by construction or otherwise, to have read into this law any power to appoint alternate judges to the Supreme Court?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I am very glad to state for the RECORD that no Member of the committee has any such notion, and we do not believe it is in the bill.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, it has been very clearly stated, and we all know it to be a fact, that under the Constitution the tenure of our Supreme Court Justices is for life. Congress fixes the salaries of the Justices of the Supreme Court from time to time, but Congress cannot change the salary of any Justice during his tenure of office.

It has been stated here that this bill gives the Justices of the Supreme Court the right to retire instead of resign, and they will continue to be Justices and will continue to draw their full pay for life, but this bill would deny any Justice who retired the right to vote or participate in any of the matters before the Supreme Court. It gives the Chief Justice the authority to designate these retired Justices to perform services in the lower Federal courts. In other words, this bill takes the Justices of the Supreme Court out of the major league and places them in the "bush" or minor league. When one retires he can never play again in the major league—Supreme Court. If he acts at all, it must be in the minor league—circuit courts or district courts.

It has been stated on the floor that this measure is necessary to enable superannuated or disabled Justices of the Supreme Court to retire and still draw their salaries, and the statement has been made that when a Supreme Court Justice resigns he is not only no longer a member of the Court but he forfeits his salary for the balance of his life.

If a Justice resigns, he, of course, is no longer a member of the Court, but he will continue to draw a salary. Therefore I can see no real necessity for this legislation at this time.

An almost identical bill was up before the House for consideration last year. At that time 144 Members of the House voted in favor of this proposition; 210 thought it was unnecessary or perhaps unwise legislation and voted against it and the bill was defeated. No additional reason has been advanced for this legislation. If the Members of the House were opposed to it last year, I cannot see why they should adopt it this year.

The plan offered by the President relating to the Supreme Court and inferior Federal courts would have the members of the Supreme Court retire at the age of 70 years, provided they had attained 10 years of service; and if they failed to retire, the President would appoint an additional Justice to the Supreme Court Bench for each and every Justice that reached the age of 70 years and 6 months and had not retired voluntarily, and in that way build the Court up to 15 members instead of 9, as it is now constituted. The President's plan is to kick them off if they do not get off. I am vigorously against the President's bill. I entertain the same views as now appears to be held by a great majority of the people of our Nation—it is an attempt on the part of the President to pack that great Court and make a "rubber stamp" out of it, subservient to the wishes of the Chief Executive.

It has been urged by the distinguished chairman of our committee [Mr. SUMNERS of Texas] and others that the measure before us has no relation whatever to the President's plan, and that this measure was up in the last Congress and favorably acted upon by the Judiciary Committee in this Congress before anyone knew of the President's plan. I think this legislation is unnecessary, and it is unfortunate for it to come before the Congress at this time.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. I agree with the gentleman in that I can see no public necessity for this legislation; still, I see no serious objection to it. It simply provides for qualified retirement of members of the Court at full pay. It is the part of the President's message dealing with the question of enlarging the Supreme Court that chills and frightens me, and not the rest of his recommendations. I think it would be well for us to go along with this bill.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I have such a high regard for each and every member of that great Court, it seems to me that this measure detracts from them. Boiled down, we assume there are members of that great Court who realize their incapacity to serve the people of this Nation, but they will not resign because when they do so some Congress in the future may reduce their salaries. Let us bear in mind that unless there is a change in the law those who might resign in the future would receive the identical salary as those who would retire under this bill. It is a mere assumption that there will ever be a change in the salaries between those who resign and those who retire. I do not believe there is a single member of the Supreme Court who is so critical of such a probable loss in salary that he would be guided one way or the other in determining whether he would or would not remain as a member of that Court. If there be any such member, may I say that I have less respect for him than I now have.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. There may be members of that Court who are poor, who have worn themselves out in public service, and while able to do the work they would like to retire. This bill would enable them to go upon the inactive list at full pay. I can see no real objection.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. It is true they could do that, but under the law as it now is they can resign and still draw their pay. I cannot conceive of any member of that high Court continuing to act unless he is convinced that he can and is rendering a real service to our country. I cannot believe there is any member remaining on the Court for the salary which attaches to the office. I am inclined to think that it would be just as honorable to resign in case of incapacity as it would be to retire and go to the inferior courts. What member of the Supreme Court desires to leave that great body and go to an inferior court? It requires health and ability to serve on the circuit court, and circuit court of appeals, or district court.

Mr. Chairman, we have gone along for nearly 150 years without this law, and matters have worked out all right. What I deplore is the fact that this bill is shunted into the House at this particular time when there is so much feeling, doubt, and uncertainty in the minds of the people of the country as to the attitude of this administration toward the courts. There is a general feeling that this administration wants to do something to the courts and force the courts to uphold, as many believe, the unconstitutional acts of Congress and the usurpation of power on the part of the Executive.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Is it not the gentleman's confirmed opinion if this bill is passed the people of the United States will consider it a part of the President's program?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. If this bill accomplishes anything, it will mean that the members of the Supreme Court will retire, and in that event the President will make appointments to fill their places, and therefore the passage of this bill will accomplish the same thing as proposed in the President's program.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Does the gentleman oppose the principle of retirement on reaching a certain age limit in the Government service generally?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. No; not generally.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Why do you make an exception in the case of the judiciary?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Because the Supreme Court is an exception in itself.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. All of them are in the public service.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Would the gentleman from Mississippi put the Supreme Court of the United States upon the same footing and deal with it the same as with clerks and subordinate officials in the Government service?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. We are putting them on the footing they deserve; that is, we are giving them the opportunity to retire with full pay while other Federal officials may retire and receive only a part of their former salaries.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. As heretofore pointed out the members of the Supreme Court have got a right to resign and receive their pay and they will receive as much pay as they would receive by retiring under this bill, unless some future Congress should cut the pay down. My friend from Mississippi is deeply concerned over this pay of these Justices of the Supreme Court. There is not one word of evidence that any member of the Supreme Court now or at any other time has asked for this legislation. There has been no demand so far as I have been able to learn for it from any member of that great Court.

Mr. CITRON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. CITRON. In my State and in several other States there are mandatory provisions in the law requiring the justices of the supreme court to retire at the age of 70. This means that in these States they go even further than this bill provides, and, furthermore, the judges after retiring may act as trial justices or as referees in certain cases, but no one has suggested in these States that the dignity or the honor of the court or the justices has been diminished in any way.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I look upon the Supreme Court as the greatest Court in all of the history of the world. We require special qualifications for members of that great Court. This Court is the last word in protecting the rights and liberties of the people of this country. This bill fixes a certain age. I do not know how anyone can fix 70 years as a proper age to retire. As a matter of fact, Justice John Marshall, Justice Taney, Justice White, Justice Hughes, and other Chief Justices, as well as members of the Supreme Court, performed most outstanding service to this country after they had reached the age of 70 years. These matters should be settled entirely without any partisanship. The Supreme Court must be kept free from politics or any other influence that would prevent a fair interpretation of our Constitution. From my boyhood I have built up in my own mind an estimation of the Supreme Court as one of the greatest progressive institutions in all the history of the world. This measure has not been asked for by them and, in my judgment, it weakens and cheapens the Supreme Court. I feel strongly that this is not the time to bring up this question. This administration has shown its disapproval of the Supreme Court. This bill is an invitation for them to resign or retire—leave the major league and go back to the bush league and have their places filled by those whose opinions will be in harmony with the President.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. If this bill were enacted into law, it would not disturb the tenure of Chief Justice Hughes. He would not avail himself of it unless he became sick or felt that he ought to get off the bench. It is entirely up to him, is it not?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute. I cannot quite catch the point the gentleman makes. If you give a man who feels he is worn out in the service of his country an opportunity to retire, I do not see how you lessen his dignity or show any lack of affection for him or lack of appreciation of his services.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. These Justices can draw their salaries whether they resign or retire. I feel their salary is not a matter of moment with the nine men who compose the Supreme Court of the United States. I think this would likely be construed by them as an effort on the part of the legislative branch of the Government to either force or induce them to retire.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman another minute.

Does the gentleman believe there is a man on the Supreme Court Bench who would go off that bench if he felt he was able to perform his duties, attracted by this offer of a continuation of his salary? That is not a fair question, and I withdraw it.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I would answer the gentleman's question in a fair way, even if it is not a fair question.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I will take it back, but if the gentleman wants to answer it, go ahead.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. The gentleman from Texas has stated it is not a fair question.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. If we follow the gentleman's argument to its conclusion, we would advocate the Justices of the Supreme Court serving in the first instance without any compensation at all.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Not at all. I insist that a man who is qualified to go on that great Court must have something in his mind bigger than the matter of salary. He must have and, I assume, in almost every instance his great concern is rendering service to his country, but as pointed out heretofore, if he should resign he would draw his salary just the same as if he retires. No one here will contend that if a Justice had to leave the Supreme Court on account of ill health he would then become active to any material extent in the lower Federal courts.

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, in the beginning I want it distinctly understood I am not in favor of the President's program in reference to the retirement of Justices from the Supreme Court, packing the Court, or whatever you may call it. On another occasion I shall express my views on that vital matter.

We try to eliminate politics from the Committee on the Judiciary and, unless there is outside interference, I am sure we come very near reaching our objective.

The bill which we are now considering is not a new bill, and in view of the debate and inferences that is a very important fact. More than 2 years ago, this identical bill was introduced by the chairman of the committee. It was given thorough committee consideration, was reported favorably to the House, and was up for consideration before the House on March 6, 1935. The bill was defeated at that time because of spurious arguments made by, let us say, well-meaning but uninformed Members. The gentleman from Texas, Mr. Blanton, then a Member of the House, took an active part in the discussion and many a Member was led to believe that we were creating a new pension law for retiring Supreme Court Justices. In the depression, of course, such action would not only be unwarranted but extremely unpopular. That was not the case, however.

The genesis of this legislation, or the reason behind its introduction, was an interpretation of the Economy Act passed in 1933. Existing law expressly provides that district and circuit Federal judges shall be permitted to retire when reaching the age of 70 years and having served 10 years on the court. The law also provides that their compensation or salary shall continue at the same rate they are receiving at the time of retirement up to their death. The law further provides that these retired judges shall be subject to call for the purpose of performing certain duties under the direction of the presiding judge of the circuit.

The law provides, however, that Supreme Court Justices shall be permitted to resign on retirement pay, which pay is at the same rate the Justice is being compensated at the time of his resignation. So that, as a matter of fact, a Supreme Court Justice is no longer a Justice of the Supreme Court after he resigns, although he draws the retirement annuity. As I recall, there was but one living former Justice of the Supreme Court at the time the Economy Act was passed, and that was former Justice Holmes. It was held by some authority, possibly the Comptroller General, that while the compensation of a district or circuit judge could not be reduced during his lifetime, yet the annuity or pension received by a Justice of the Supreme Court after his resignation from the Court was subject to dimunition by act of Congress. In short, it is the purpose of this bill to place the Supreme Court Justices on exactly the same footing as the circuit and district judges so far as retirement pay is concerned. This bill attempts to and does nothing more or less.

The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCLEAN] calls attention to paragraph 2 of section 375 of the United States Code, and he inquired as to whether or not the President or some other authority might not construe this bill as including said paragraph 2. This matter was considered by the committee and the committee was of the unanimous opinion that the fears of the gentleman from New Jersey are unwarranted. Under this bill the Justices of the Supreme Court are granted the same privileges and rights accorded judges of the district and circuit courts who retire. Paragraph 2, to which the gentleman refers, bestows upon the President certain privileges, but the legislation which we are now considering in no way affects paragraph 2, and paragraph 2 in no way affects this legislation. However, if there is any serious question about the matter, all doubt can be removed by inserting in the proper place an amendment providing that this law shall affect paragraph 1 of section 375 of the United States Code only. To my mind, any such amendment is needless and would be superfluous.

This bill is in no way an invitation to Justices of the Supreme Court to resign. As I have already stated, the bill was conceived more than 2 years ago, and was not born in the manger at the White House or in any of the departments. It saw the light of day in the office of the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, and surely no one had any intimation at that time that the President, 2 years later, was going to advocate changing the personnel of the Supreme Court. Of the justice of the bill there can be no doubt, and I know of no one among us who opposes the bill on its merits. All the opposition seems to be because there is fear in the hearts of some of the timid that the country will misconstrue the action here today as an action prompted by the demand of the President in his recent message. I took an active part in reporting this bill favorably more than 2 years ago, and I voted for it then because I believed then that it was right. I am of the same belief today, and I am not going to change my vote for political purposes. [Applause.] I am guided by the same principles in considering this bill that will guide me if the President's program to change the personnel of the Supreme Court so that it may be composed of men "whose minds run along with" the President comes before the committee and the House. You must believe me when I say that just so soon as politics enters into the making up of our Supreme Court, and just so soon as this body yields to any pressure other than the conscientious judgment of its Members in reference to the Supreme Court, then our form of government is headed toward the end.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Is it not true that the public generally thought that the law governing Supreme Court Justices was the same as that governing district and circuit judges?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes; until the holding under the Economy Act.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. This bill under consideration does not in any way change the present existing law as to the amount the Supreme Court judge will receive if he resigns?

Mr. MICHENER. Not in the least. The Supreme Court judge can resign today if he has served 10 years and is 70 years of age and draw the same salary that he would get under this bill. This bill makes it impossible to take that retirement pay away from him.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Is it not fair to state that when we had the bill up before, the debates indicate strongly that Members brought up the assertion that it was coercing?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes; some Members made the point that the bill was an invitation. There was not so much said about that in the open, but there was sort of a whispering campaign on the floor that this was an effort to get rid of some of the Justices on the Supreme Bench. For my part, there is absolutely nothing to that suggestion. We are all well acquainted with all of the members of the Supreme Court today. All of us do not at all times agree with all of their opinions, yet we must concede to them the honesty and integrity to which they are entitled. And the fact that they do not always agree among themselves is the best evidence that they are independent and each aiming to do the right as he sees it. As the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] has just implied, there is not one among us who believes that the passage of this bill would in any way affect the decision of one of the present occupants of the Court to retire. This bill will in no way change the retirement pay that a retiring Justice would receive; that is, he would receive the pay that everybody always thought he was entitled to receive, unless the Congress by future action decreased his retirement pay, as was done under the Economy Act. That would take additional legislation. So let us remember that this bill is a committee bill; that it is nothing new; that it has nothing to do with the program suggested by the President in his recent message, and let us vote in a nonpartisan, judicial way.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this bill because I think it is fair and just and equitable. It is true it was defeated in the last Congress, but why was it defeated? Because of a whispering campaign on both sides of the aisle to the effect that if this bill passed it would be in the nature of coercion upon the sitting Justices of the Supreme Court, and would serve notice upon them that they should retire under the provisions of the bill, with full annuities, pensions, and compensation. Since that time a great issue has been raised, a far greater issue, by the President in his message to the Congress, in which he urged and proposed legislation to increase the membership of the Court by six, thereby giving him control of the Court. The proposal of the President transcends all party lines and is a great American issue. I remember the adage that "fools rush in where angels fear to tread"; but I am willing to predict that if this measure goes through, and I hope it will, the Judiciary Committee of the House and the Judiciary Committee of the other body will never report to Congress the legislation proposed by the President to increase the membership of the Court. Therefore, I hope that those who are opposed to the President's proposal giving him control of the judiciary, destroying the three separate and independent branches of our Government and our representative and constitutional form of government, the very structure of our American system, will vote to pass this bill, because it means the end of the attempt of the President to usurp the powers of the Supreme Court.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I would rather not yield.

Mr. DUNN. I wish the gentleman would make that statement again, as I did not quite get it.

Mr. FISH. I said if this bill should pass I anticipate, believe, and am convinced that no legislation increasing the membership of the Court would ever come out of the Judiciary Committee of this House or out of the other body. I believe the gentleman who probably is going to speak next for the majority side will take the same position, because in today's press the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER], the ranking member of the Judiciary Committee is quoted as saying:

> I think the House Judiciary Committee has taken all the action it will take when it passes these two bills.

The same kind of statement was made by the Senator from Indiana, Senator VAN NUYS, who likewise is quoted in the press today as saying:

> It is my opinion that the Senate Judiciary Committee, composed as it is of profound students of the Constitution, after careful deliberation and study, will come to the conclusion there is no justification for the enlargement of the Supreme Court.

If Federal judges should be retired at 70, the people ought to pass on the issue through a constitutional amendment. There is no reason why any Justice of the Supreme Court should retire if this bill is enacted into law until he wants to. I further predict that as the Democratic Members of the House and the Senate hear from the people back home that they will not dare to openly stack the Court, circumvent the Constitution, and make the Supreme Court a rubber stamp for the President. I trust that every Member of the House will put his partisanship aside and vote for the bill, because it should not be considered on a partisan basis.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

Mr. CELLER rose.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman begins, will he yield to me for a question?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. SIROVICH. Since the enactment of the law in 1919 which provides for the retirement of United States Federal judges at the age of 70, how many such judges have availed themselves of that privilege, up to the present time?

Mr. CELLER. I have not the exact number, but there has been a score or so of circuit and district judges who have availed themselves of that privilege.

Mr. Chairman, I am very sorry the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] sought to inject a political note into this debate. The members of the Committee on the Judiciary, Republicans and Democrats, have been more or less in accord on this bill, and I wish to make it clear that we bring this proposition here unallied with and free from any question of politics, and with no relation whatsoever to what the President may or may not have said. This is Calendar Wednesday, and it is just a fortuitous circumstance that it is. The mere fact that the bill comes in on the heels of the President's message has nothing to do with the bill. It is on the calendar; our committee has the call. Therefore it is brought up today; otherwise it might not have been considered for some time to come.

We have wrestled with this proposition for 2 years, and we tackled it originally because of the predicament that the late lamented Mr. Justice Holmes was in when he resigned. With the Economy Act we cut his salary in half, from $20,000 to $10,000. That was an unfortunate circumstance, and that gave rise to the urgent need of according to the Supreme Court Justices the selfsame privilege that we have been according the circuit and district judges since 1919. It became evident that Supreme Court Justices were being discriminated against. They, like the district and circuit judges, could and can resign but unlike those judges they could not retire.

I go further back than 1919. The same privileges have been accorded to district and circuit judges and the Supreme Court Justices since 1889, when we gave the right to those judges to resign, but a resignation and a retirement are two distinct propositions. What we do by this bill is to cure the defects of the act of 1869 and the act of 1919.

What is the difference between resigning and retiring? There is a considerable difference. When a judge resigns he ceases to be a judge. Although he can resign, under the act of 1869, with full salary, that salary is subject to revision and curtailment by the Congress. When he retires he is still a judge, subject to call. In the case of district and circuit judges, he may be assigned for judicial duties within the circuit or district. He is thus recalled, as it were, from retirement and put to work.

But we never gave this right to retire to the Supreme Court Judges. I have scanned the record of the debates under the act of 1919, but find no basis for this failure to accord this same privilege to the Supreme Court Judges as was accorded to the other judges. Query: Why should there be any distinction?

The Supreme Court judges do not avail themselves of the right to resign, because Congress could then control the salary. If they could retire, on the other hand, they would still be judges, and, under the Constitution, they have a lifetime employment contract at $20,000 per year for Associate Justices and $20,500 per year for the Chief Justice. We allow them to resign. Why not allow them to retire?

The Constitution provides that—

> The judges, both of the Supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their offices during good behavior, and shall, at stated times, receive for their services a compensation, which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office.

This bill is simply an optional retirement bill. There is no coercion, there is no compulsion about it. There is no attempt to bludgeon or blackjack the judges into retirement. They can take it or leave it. Furthermore, there is no hidden sting or hidden trick in this bill. We have employed no hidden strategy. It is a clear-cut measure. There is no deliberate attempt to "put over" anything.

Our colleague on our committee, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION], for who we have the highest regard, says, "This bill cheapens these men." I deny that. This bill honors them. We allow the admission that longevity may sometimes impair their faculties. We allow them, in dignity and fairness, to retire. We remove the element of uncertainty, calculated to deter a judge from surrendering a life salary.

When, on April 7, 1869, the 1869 bill was passed, Senator Charles Sumner, of Massachusetts, stated on the floor of the Senate the following:

> I take it our object is to accomplish both; to give to judges who have earned an honorable retreat what they have earned, and to secure complete efficiency to the courts. If we can accomplish these two results, we shall do much.

However, time has indicated that we have not afforded "honorable retirement" to Supreme Court judges. The 1869 bill only permitted them to resign. The instant bill permits them to retire and earn an honorable retreat.

Under the instant bill we are not free from the constitutional prohibition, the injunction against us, which would prevent us from controlling the judges' salary in whole or in part. Because when they retire and are placed in a position where they may be assigned for duties, they are still judges, and we are still held within the constitutional prohibition or injunction that we cannot diminish their salaries or affect their salaries during their life tenure. We allow retirement. We cannot touch their life salaries. That is all we do by this bill. We allow the Supreme Court Justices, and properly so, in addition to present right to resign, the right to retire with full salary. Certainly, in full justice to them, we should permit them to resign.

I may say to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] that I do not think his amendment is necessary, because he reads from section 375 of the Judicial Code, and it must be taken into consideration that the first paragraph thereof refers to what is known as optional retirement on the part of district and circuit judges, but the second paragraph thereof refers to something entirely different, namely, compulsory retirement.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] has expired.

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from New York 5 additional minutes.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. I possibly used unfortunate language. I agree with the gentleman entirely; but I said if there was any question in the minds of anybody, the amendment suggested by me would cure any such idea. I do not think it is necessary at all.

Mr. CELLER. I am glad for the correction. The amendment is absolutely unnecessary, because the second paragraph refers to compulsory retirement, which, you may remember, was adverted to by the President in his message recently. He said concerning this right of the President to retire—compulsorily—district and circuit judges:

> The discretionary and indefinite nature of this legislation has rendered it ineffective. No President should be asked to determine the ability or disability of any particular judge.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I wish to ask a question for my own information. Of course, the Constitution provides for the Supreme Court. Congress fixes the jurisdiction of the other courts and also fixes the salaries. When a Supreme Court Justice retires, what will be his status then? Will he have the status of a circuit judge?

Mr. CELLER. He is now, of course, a circuit judge. He is still a Supreme Court judge and he would be assigned for duty on a circuit. He could not be assigned for duty on the Supreme Court, because the gentleman can well see that might be dangerous. It would give the Chief Justice the right to summon any of these particular retired judges to sit on any particular case; and when we consider the transcendental importance of the cases that come before that Court, no judge, chief judge or otherwise, should have the right to select any particular retired judge to sit with him on a case of such importance. The chief judge could otherwise "hand pick" his court. Danger lurks therein.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The jurisdiction of the Supreme Court justice, when he goes on circuit, is not coextensive with the circuit judge. It is jurisdiction that the Supreme Court justice has that is peculiar to him.

Mr. CELLER. For practical purposes, it will, I suppose, be practically the same as the jurisdiction of the circuit judge. Remember the bill reads, in part, as follows:

> A Justice so retiring may nevertheless be called upon by the Chief Justice and be by him authorized to perform such judicial duties, in any judicial circuit, including those of a circuit justice in such circuit, as such retired Justice may be willing to undertake.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Now, the statute provides that we shall have only nine members of the Supreme Court. If we are going to have a retired member of the Supreme Court, he is not a member of the Supreme Court and he is not a member of the circuit court of appeals, because he can have only the authority he had when he was a Supreme Court Justice. What will the situation be?

Mr. CELLER. My understanding would be that the President would have the right to appoint. The bill reads, lines 11 and 12, page 1, as follows:

> The President shall thereupon be authorized to appoint a successor.

It may be that the passage of this bill will ease a great deal of the tension that exists in the country today because of certain agitation that has arisen following a certain message. I hope that that excitement will die down and the tautness of the situation will disappear. I hope that the Members will vote for this bill and cooperate in its passage to bring about that result, because it is doing the country no good to have this tremendous agitation with reference to the Supreme Court. I think this bill might have a very quieting effect, and for that reason, among other reasons, it is sincerely to be hoped you will give favorable consideration to it.

It may be that the dignity of the Supreme Court Justices has been ruffled somewhat, and, out of self-respect they might not wish to retire. That may be the case now, but I am sure that when calmer moments come to those gentlemen, when they shall have given more mature consideration and reflection to the matter, say, in 6 months or a year, I am quite hopeful one or more Justices of the Supreme Court will retire.

I say this in all confidence—but as Ben Franklin once said, "Three men can keep a secret if two men die"—when we had this bill before the last Congress we were given to understand that the result of the passage of the bill would likely be the retirement of one or more of the Justices. I shall not name them. Perhaps those gentlemen will shortly or comparatively shortly after the bill is passed retire.

The American Bar Association came forward and objected originally to the bill. The American Bar Association today is in favor of the bill. Certain Members of the House felt it was a pension. It is not a pension, as has been explained. Because the American Bar Association is in favor of the bill and in general the sentiment of the country is in favor of the bill now, I think we are in duty bound to vote favorably. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] has expired.

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN].

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, I have the greatest respect for the distinguished chairman of this committee. I have the greatest respect and affection for the minority members of this committee, but I am going to differ with them on this issue and on this legislation. My judgment is that the timing of this bill is bad. To my mind the fair inference is that the present strategy is to make the unthinking people of the country believe that this House is extending a cordial invitation to the members of the Supreme Court who are over 70 years of age to resign. I think this is unfortunate. I think, irrespective of how this House thinks and how it finally will act in connection with the President's message and the President's proposed legislation, that this procedure at this time is bad. It suggests the build-up and the procedure of other days on other bills of Frankfurter, Corcoran, Cohen, and company.

The issue of the Supreme Court and what shall be done with the Supreme Court in the present historic clash between the Executive and the Supreme Court rests in the future. It is my judgment that passing this legislation at this time, much as I dislike to differ with the gentlemen of the committee, is drawing a red herring across the trail of that historic battle which is now pending. For myself I refuse to aid in beclouding that issue and in throwing dust in the eyes of the American people by passing such legislation at this time.

I regret this strategy. I regret what to my mind is an obvious attempt—innocent, perhaps, but nonetheless obvious—attempt to becloud this issue and encourage the procedure suggested by the President. If our great country is to survive, if our liberties are to be maintained, the proposed merger of the executive and judicial branches of our Government must be stopped. That issue is a tremendous one. It should be debated at length on its merits and not be beclouded by any such parliamentary strategy as is here presented. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. ANDREWS].

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I am not a member of the legal fraternity, but I am glad to have a few moments today to place myself on record as wholeheartedly opposed to the Court proposal of the President. It seems to me rather unfortunate that this other proposal of the committee should be brought forth here at this time. It would appear to me that this would be a reasonable piece of legislation to consider in ordinary times; and in spite of certain things which have been said, a multitude of expressions which have appeared in the press, and personal expressions which all of us have received, I am inclined to think that a measure of this kind deserves recognition.

All of us hear a great deal today about the fitness of men at different ages. I know that I would support this measure were the retirement age placed at 75; and if it is agreeable to the committee and if the chairman will recognize me at the proper time, I intend to offer an amendment, in line 7, after the parenthesis, inserting the words "except that the retirement age shall be 75."

I know that there has been a great deal of discussion and consideration by the committee and by the Members of Congress on that feature of any such retirement bill. I have a distinct impression that the membership on the Supreme Court is in many cases a reward for great ability, distinguished and renowned service in lower courts, but I do not believe there has seldom been an appointment by any President of a man without taking into consideration the man's physical ability and his mental caliber. There may in the future be many men whom Presidents would wish to appoint of age 65, 68, or 70; and it seems to me that by raising the retirement age to 75 we will remove a great deal of the personal element which this bill represents because of the ages of the present members of the Supreme Court.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS. I yield.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Would the gentleman not be reconciled to the language of the bill when he bears in mind that retirement is purely voluntary, that it cannot be compelled? Does not the gentleman feel that if a judge has been on the bench for 10 years and can retire at age 70, and feels in his own judgment that he ought to have lighter work, that it is fair to him, as well as in the public interest, to let him make this choice?

Mr. ANDREWS. I appreciate the force of the gentleman's argument, but I regard as very important at the present time the removal of any personal element in the situation having to do with the present members of the Supreme Court.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALEY].

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, it does not seem to me that any logical argument has been advanced by the opposition to this bill up to the present time.

A bill of similar purpose came before the Seventy-fourth Congress and was debated on the floor of the House of Representatives on March 15, 1935. The distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee introduced this bill very early this session. It was referred to my subcommittee for consideration, and the only question with which the committee was concerned was whether or not this bill justified favorable recommendation on its own merits. It was reported out of the subcommittee without a dissenting voice and was then presented to the full Committee on the Judiciary. After due consideration, the full committee voted to report the legislation to the House with its favorable recommendation for its enactment. I believe there were only two members of the committee who opposed this recommendation.

Mr. Chairman, the issue is clear cut, whether or not we shall extend to members of the United States Supreme Court a privilege already enjoyed by members of the inferior Federal courts, the privilege of retiring after they have reached the age of 70 and completed 10 years of service on that bench.

Section 1, article III, of the Constitution of the United States provides that—

> The judges, both of the Supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their offices during good behavior, and shall, at stated times, receive for their services a compensation which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office.

This provision was intended to secure, so far as fixed compensation could do it, the independence of the judicial branch of the Government.

We have provided in the pending bill that any judge of the Supreme Court who exercises the retirement privilege may still continue with part of his judicial duties by accepting such assignments as he may be called upon to perform by the Chief Justice in any judicial circuit, including those of a circuit justice in such circuit.

Under the terms of this bill, a Supreme Court Judge who retires will still retain his commission and will still perform judicial functions. He will, therefore, retain the constitutional guaranties against diminishment of his compensation, which would be lost to him if he resigned. He will still remain in office within the meaning of article III of the Constitution and his independence of action will be protected by its guaranties.

Existing law—section 260, Judicial Code—makes provision only for resignation of a Supreme Court Justice. Such resignation severs entirely his judicial connection with the Court and removes from him the protection of article III of the Constitution. It is true that this section provides that, on such resignation, if he has reached the age of 70 years and held the office for at least 10 years, he shall, during the residue of his natural life, receive the salary which is payable at the time of his resignation. However, this compensation is statutory and may be diminished by any subsequent act of Congress.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me it is a matter of simple justice to these gentlemen whose services are so essential to the preservation of our Government that we extend to them the privilege already accorded to inferior court judges.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEALEY. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. May I ask the gentleman this question as chairman of the subcommittee: There was a bill, H. R. 5161, before us at the last session, and while it differs in language to some extent from the bill now being considered, in effect is it the same bill?

Mr. HEALEY. I can answer that in the affirmative. It is, in effect, the same bill.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEALEY. I yield to my colleague from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. And the fact this bill was considered by the committee during the last session and reported out and introduced by the distinguished chairman of the committee at this session before any recommendation came here from the President clearly shows that the argument of personal reflection is not warranted or justified?

Mr. HEALEY. That is absolutely correct, and I thank the gentleman.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICH. This bill is being considered at this time without having a report attached stipulating the change which it is intended to make in existing law. In other words, it is not in conformity with the Ramseyer rule, and I therefore make the point of order this bill cannot be considered at the present time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair may say in answer to the gentleman's inquiry that the House has already proceeded to a consideration of this measure and debate has been had upon it. Therefore the point of order comes too late.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, a further parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICH. The rules of the House strictly prohibit a bill of this kind being considered, and if we have made one mistake, why should we make two?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman cite the rule to which he refers?

Mr. RICH. The Ramseyer rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Ramseyer rule would not apply now.

Mr. RICH. The Ramseyer rule makes it subject to a point of order before consideration of the bill commenced.

The CHAIRMAN. No point of order was raised. The measure has been given consideration; therefore the point raised by the gentleman from Pennsylvania comes too late.

Mr. RICH. If it was wrong, why go ahead?

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, the Chair cannot answer that question.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. McLAUGHLIN].

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, so much debate and discussion has been had upon this measure that I should not presume to rise at this time were it not for the fact I am confident a misunderstanding in reference to the bill exists in the minds of certain members of the Committee. We have had quite an elaborate discussion of the bill, but many things have been mentioned and discussed in debate which have no place in this debate from the standpoint of logic.

Mr. Chairman, a bill similar to this was introduced 2 years ago by the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee. It was favorably reported by the Judiciary Committee and came on to the floor of this House for consideration. That bill was defeated in a roll-call vote 2 years ago. Many Members today are examining the roll call to see how they voted in order that they may not be inconsistent.

The fact is when the bill was under consideration 2 years ago there was injected into the debate matter which had no place in the discussion. There was insinuated in the debate the suggestion that this was a bill to provide a pension for judges leaving the Supreme Court bench. That is not the case.

My reason for propounding an inquiry of my distinguished colleague on the Judiciary Committee, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER], was to bring out the fact that the bill under consideration today does not in any way touch, affect, or concern the amount of money which any judge of a Federal court will receive in the event he resigns. In order to make what I hope may be a contribution in the way of clarity to this debate, I am going to ask the indulgence of the members of the Committee while I read the existing law and the amendment which we have under consideration. I believe it is important, Mr. Chairman, that the law be read as it exists today, and the proposed amendment be read, for the reason that within the past 5 or 10 minutes one of the distinguished Members of the House made the statement, "If a Justice of the United States Supreme Court resigns today, he gets nothing." That is not true. By statute, if a Judge of the Supreme Court resigns today, he receives for life the same salary which he is receiving at the time of his resignation. This bill affects, concerns, and touches only the retirement of a Judge of the Supreme Court.

The law at present reads as follows:

When any judge of any court of the United States appointed to hold his office during good behavior resigns his office after having held a commission or commissions as judge of any such court or courts at least 10 years continuously and having attained the age of 70 years, he shall during the residue of his natural life receive the salary which is payable at the time of his resignation for the office that he held at the time of his resignation.

But instead of resigning, any judge—

Mark this:

other than a Justice of the Supreme Court, who is qualified to resign under the foregoing provisions, may retire upon the salary of which he is then in receipt from regular service on the bench, and the President shall thereupon be authorized to appoint a successor.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. To continue:

But a judge so retiring may nevertheless be called upon by the senior circuit judge of that circuit and be by him authorized to perform such judicial duties in such circuit as such retired judge may be willing to undertake.

Now, eliminating some features of the existing law that are not important in this discussion, let us proceed to the amendment proposed.

That amendment reads as follows:

Instead of resigning any Justice of the Supreme Court who is qualified to resign under the foregoing provision, may retire upon the salary of which he is then in receipt from regular, active service on the bench, and the President thereupon be authorized to appoint a successor; and the Justice so retiring may nevertheless be called upon by the Chief Justice and be by him authorized to perform such judicial duties in any judicial circuit, including those of a circuit justice in such circuit, as such retired Justice may be willing to undertake.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. With respect to compensation the difference between retiring and resigning is that in resigning the salary may be eliminated by a subsequent Congress, whereas is cannot be changed after retirement.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Yes; and under existing law if a Justice resigns, his compensation may be substantially reduced by an act of Congress, as was illustrated in the case of Mr. Justice Holmes.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I yield.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. There is this additional difference, if a Justice retires instead of resigns, he may be used for some good purpose in connection with the business of the judiciary, whereas under existing law, if he resigns he gets the salary but cannot be used even though he may be able to render some useful service. This bill gives the additional advantage to the Government of being able to use the services of such Supreme Court Justices in the districts instead of simply paying them and not being able to get any service from them whatever.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. That is exactly true, and I thank the distinguished chairman for his contribution.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Chairman, I would like to propound an inquiry to the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute in order that the gentleman may do that.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Is it not true that at the present time if a member of the Supreme Court should resign, the Congress, by statute, could take away his salary altogether?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is right.

Mr. GILCHRIST. So that is an additional distinction as to what may happen when this bill is passed and present existing law.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. But he is not required to resign.

Mr. GILCHRIST. No; but if he does resign, this Congress, or some future Congress, might take away his salary altogether.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUNN].

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, I intend to vote for this bill, but if I were convinced it was going to obstruct the legislation which President Roosevelt presented to the House on Friday, February 5, I would oppose it, because the legislation the President presented is for the benefit of the laboring people of our country. I hope the Judiciary Committee will report favorably the President's bill, because it is constructive, progressive, and humane. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire of my colleague the gentleman from Kansas whether he desires to use any further time?

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I want to avail myself of this opportunity to pay a tribute to my colleagues on the Republican side of the House who are members of my committee. I believe that this committee has less partisanship in it than any committee in the House. I doubt that any committee could have brought out a bill on the floor of the House susceptible of so much partisan wrangling and had as high-class, patriotic, and statesmanlike consideration as has been given by my colleagues on the Republican side of the House who are members of this committee.

I want to make this statement to the House. I do not know what the Chair may hold with reference to amendments that may be offered, but the Members of the House know as well as I do that this is the sort of bill that can attract all sorts of amendments, especially at this time. The Committee on the Judiciary carefully examined this matter, and we would like this bill, if enacted, to be a clear-cut, definite proposition of dealing solely with the question of retirement instead of the resignation of the Justices of the Supreme Court.

As has been stated, the lawyers of the country as represented by the American Bar Association agree with reference to this bill. There is practically unanimous agreement on the part of the Democrats and the Republicans on the Judiciary Committee. The President of the United States has been in accord with the bill from its inception. The House is in accord with the bill. I believe the members of the Supreme Court would appreciate the compliment of the bill, and I hope the Members of the House will stand with the committee and defeat every single amendment of any sort that may be offered. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no further yielding of time, the Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Justices of the Supreme Court are hereby granted the same rights and privileges with regard to retiring, instead of resigning, granted to judges other than Justices of the Supreme Court by section 260 of the Judicial Code (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 375), and the President shall be authorized to appoint a successor to any such Justice of the Supreme Court so retiring from regular active service on the bench, but such Justice of the Supreme Court so retired may nevertheless be called upon by the Chief Justice and be by him authorized to perform such judicial duties, in any judicial circuit, including those of a circuit justice in such circuit, as such retired Justice may be willing to undertake.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the parenthesis (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 375) insert: "except that the retirement age shall be 75."

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, I gave you a few moments ago my reasons for proposing this amendment. I hope that no Member on the Republican side of the House will vote for this amendment because I stand on this side of the House, and also that the Members on the Democratic side will vote without regard to party.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS. I yield.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. The bill under consideration would permit the Justices to remain on the bench until 75, if the amendment were adopted.

Mr. ANDREWS. Yes. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] covered that. It would remove the personal element in the present situation, and I think that is something for us to consider today. I think it is unfortunate that we are called upon to act on this bill at the present time.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. First I want to ask the gentleman from New York if he will vote for the bill if his amendment is carried?

Mr. ANDREWS. Yes; I will.

Mr. RANKIN. Then the gentleman would only postpone for a few months the application of the bill as written, because with the exception of three of the judges they are all over 70 years of age, and in a few months the majority of them will be 75.

Now, a great deal has been said about this measure as compared with the President's proposal. There is not so much difference between the two propositions. If every Justice who is 70 years old would retire at once, it would give the President the right to appoint six judges immediately. That is exactly the number the President could appoint if his proposal were adopted. But under the President's proposal he could not appoint a Member of the House or a Member of the Senate to the Supreme Court, because no Member of the House or the Senate is eligible to be appointed during his term of office to a position created by Congress while he is a Member of either House.

If a judge retires under the provisions of the bill now before the House, the President could appoint a Member of the House or the Senate to succeed him, since this bill is not creating new positions but providing for the creation of vacancies in existing positions.

Another difference is that these retiring judges would be entirely off the Court. Under the President's proposal they would remain on the Court, and would have a voice along with the additional men proposed by the President's recommendation. If this bill does not mean that these men are going to retire, it does not mean anything. If these men are not going to retire under it, then this measure is a waste of paper and of the time of the House. If they are going to retire, if those judges take advantage of it, there will be just as many new appointees under this bill as there would be under the President's proposal.

Mr. Chairman, I propose to vote for this measure, but I want every Member to know just exactly what it means. I, for one, am not attacking the Supreme Court of the United States. I have stated on this floor time and again that I am not in favor of taking away from the Supreme Court the right to pass upon the constitutionality of statutes, but I believe that the President's proposal is sound, and I believe this measure is going in the same direction, but I believe the adoption of the President's proposal would be better than the passage of the present bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma: Page 1, line 4, insert after the word "retiring" the words "except that their retired pay shall be subject to taxation under the applicable Federal income-tax law."

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that amendment that it is not germane.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman withhold his point of order for 1 minute?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas make the point of order or reserve the point of order?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order for 1 minute.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, members of the Committee, the amendment I have just offered to the pending bill to retire Supreme Court Justices at full salary at the age of 70 years merely seeks to make that retirement pay subject to the income-tax laws and not to permit retired Justices to evade the payment of income tax on retirement gratuities that an overgenerous Congress proposes to give them.

I deeply regret that the distinguished and able chairman of the Judiciary Committee has raised a point of order against the pending amendment. While I thank him for reserving his point of order to give me this brief time to discuss it, I frankly feel that Members of this House should be given an opportunity to vote on this amendment on its merits and not seek to defeat the amendment by a mere technicality. [Applause.]

The sixteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States was certainly thought to be broad enough by the framers of it to cover all forms of income taxation and all salaries, including the judiciary, as well as Members of Congress. The Constitution says:

That Congress shall have the power to lay and collect taxes on incomes from whatever source derived without apportionment among the several States, and without regard to any census or enumeration.

It will be recalled that in the famous case of Evans against Gore, Mr. Justice Van Devanter, who delivered the opinion of the Court, rendered an opinion that many eminent lawyers as well as others felt was a clear evasion of the sixteenth amendment in declaring that salaries of the Supreme Court Justices were not subject to the income-tax laws of the land. The theory on which the Court based its decision was the constitutional provision that the salaries of members of the Court could not be diminished during their term of office.

Assuming, for the sake of argument, that the reasoning of the Court in that case was sound, I submit that surely the Court would not go so far as to say that after a Justice of the Supreme Court has retired and after the President has appointed his successor, as he is authorized to do in the pending bill, that the retirement pay of such a Justice would still be exempt from income tax. I cannot conceive by what stretch of imagination any court could possibly go that far.

Again, Mr. Chairman, it occurs to me that after a Justice of the Supreme Court has been honored by remaining on the bench for many years and after having received a salary of $20,000 per year without the necessity of making campaigns, or other expenses which Members of Congress must incur, that he would have the temerity to object to paying income tax to this Government that had been so magnanimous to him. [Applause.]

Many Members of this House would like to cut the retirement pay of Federal judges far below their pay while in office; but it is admitted that if such an amendment were inserted in this bill, it would defeat the purpose of the act. Members who have or who may outlive their usefulness simply would refuse to retire; but certainly no patriotic Justice who is now serving or who will in the future serve on the Supreme Court of this land, could in good conscience object to paying the paltry sum of income tax that he would be subject to under the provisions of my amendment.

In the interest of economy and sane government and in an effort to help promote the general welfare of the people of this country, I have offered this pending amendment, and I sincerely hope that the distinguished and able chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary will withdraw his point of order against it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas make the point of order?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill under consideration deals with the retirement of Justices of the Supreme Court, whereas the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma deals with the subject of taxation and salaries. In the opinion of the Chair the amendment is not germane, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. McLEAN: Page 1, line 6, after the word "by", insert "the first paragraph of."

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Chairman, in view of the assurances given by the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, for whom I know we all have a great deal of respect and confidence, perhaps this amendment ought not to be presented, but to my mind we are approaching very closely an opportunity and a purpose to ascertain the opinion of Members of the House of Representatives on the recent proposal made for the reconstruction of the Supreme Court. The enactment of this measure at this time will be regarded as a step toward the adoption of the program recently proposed. The second paragraph of the provision of the code which this pending act would amend is in exactly the same language referring to the circuit court and district court judges as in the bill proposed by the Attorney General for carrying into effect the provisions of the President's message. There is not a lawyer on the floor who has not had his experience with statutory construction, and found, after many months of work, that the act did not mean exactly what it was intended to mean, and that very often additional powers and authority have been read into the law. For example, will administration spokesmen tell me whence came the authority to create corporations as Federal agencies under the laws of the State of Delaware, the District of Columbia, Maryland, and other States? The answer is that it came from the National Recovery Act. It was a stretch of the imagination, and an entirely illegal process that was followed. And there are many other instances wherein violence has been done to the intention of Congress by statutory construction. This is a simple amendment and will leave no doubt in the minds of others to whom this act may come. We should expressly limit the operation of the act to the first paragraph of the section of the code we intend to amend, so that the country will know that in the enactment of this law we had in mind a very high humanitarian purpose, and that the action on this bill is not to be construed in any way as having the slightest bearing on the controversy now raging over the reconstruction of the Supreme Court.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLEAN. Yes.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. May I direct the attention of my friend to the fact that the code referred to deals with district and circuit judges.

May I further direct the attention of the gentleman to the fact that all this pending bill does is to give these Justices of the Supreme Court the same right to retire instead of resigning now given to other judges, and gives to the Government, which pays their salaries, the opportunity to continue to have the benefit of some service from them. That is the whole scope of the bill.

Mr. McLEAN. Under the first paragraph of the new provision?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No; under the bill.

Mr. McLEAN. It is the chairman's purpose that the second paragraph shall not apply?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. It does not apply at all.

Mr. McLEAN. Then why not accept my amendment?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The gentleman does not want to do a thing that is perfectly obviously not necessary. It is not required. The gentleman would not want to put in a provision that nothing else in the code is to be amended. I hope the gentleman will not press the amendment, because it confuses things. There are some good lawyers on the gentleman's side of the House who have studied this bill, and I am sure not one of them has any doubt about it.

Mr. McLEAN. There may not be any doubt, but why not adopt the amendment and make it definite, so that the country will know we did not have in mind the controversy that is now existing?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I guess we will have to vote on the amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McLEAN].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LANHAM, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 2518) to provide for retirement of Justices of the Supreme Court, had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

(The text of the bill will be found printed in full on p. 1124.)

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays on the final passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 315, nays 76, not voting 42, as follows:

SENATE

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 1937

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God and Heavenly Father, who out of Thy treasure bringest things both new and old for our instruction: Let the voices of the past persuade us to repentance and faith; those of the present to amendment and hope; those of the revealed future to holiness and charity.

Enlighten, we beseech Thee, this erring, groping world, that ignorance and sin, injustice and oppression, misery and crime, strife and war, and all the deeds of darkness may at length be vanquished, and cease to hide Thee from Thy children's eyes.

Help us, during our brief sojourn on earth, to concentrate our little strength on life and love and duty as we find them here, and follow in the blessed steps of Him who is the true and living way, Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

CONFERENCE OF INTERNATIONAL LABOR ORGANIZATION

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States which is dated January 29, 1937, but which was not received in the Vice President's office until this morning. The clerk will read the communication.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, January 29, 1937.

The Honorable JOHN N. GARNER,
Vice President of the United States,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. VICE PRESIDENT: I am sending you herewith a draft of a resolution which I should appreciate your submitting to the Senate. It concerns the participation of the United States Government in a conference that has been called by the International Labor Organization, of which we are a member. I am also sending a copy of this draft to the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

You will note from the resolution that the International Labor Organization is to hold a meeting in April to discuss the problems of the textile industries. This meeting, which will be attended by representatives of the governments, employers, and workers of all of the leading textile-producing nations, is the outgrowth of a proposal made by the United States delegate to the twentieth session of the International Labor Conference in June 1936. This proposal was made by our delegate, upon my instruction, as a result of an investigation made by a special Cabinet committee.

This Cabinet committee was appointed at the request of Members of both Houses of Congress from textile-producing States. Its report, which was submitted to the Congress on August 21, 1935, convinced me that a thorough survey of all aspects of the textile industries in all parts of the world was essential to the development of any policy which seeks to bring stability to textile workers and employers.

In view of the importance of the textile industries to American investors and to the 600,000 American workers who derive their living from the industry, I have felt that we would have much to gain by having the International Labor Organization hold its textile conference in the United States. Accordingly, upon instruction, such a recommendation was made to the governing body of the organization and was accepted by them.

To hold the conference in the United States will involve the expenditure by the International Labor Organization of approximately $30,000 more than if the conference were held in Geneva. It is my belief that the United States Government should bear part of that extraordinary expenditure. Accordingly, the resolution I am hereby submitting calls for an authorization to pay part of the cost of these extraordinary expenditures, up to the maximum of $15,000.

May I also call to your attention the fact that if Congress authorizes a contribution of $15,000 this sum will not mean an increase in expenditure equal to that amount. If the conference were held in Geneva, it would be necessary for us to send to Geneva a delegation made up of representatives of the United States Government, the textile employers, and the textile workers. Each of these delegates would have to be accompanied by advisers who are specialists in various aspects of the textile industries. It is estimated that the total cost of sending such a delegation to Geneva would aggregate approximately $8,000. By holding the conference in Washington we would be relieved of most of that expense.

I am sure that the Honorable John G. Winant, who as United States delegate to the twentieth session of the International Labor Conference made the proposal for the calling of the textile conference, and the Secretary of Labor will be most pleased to make available to your committee any further information bearing upon the conference that it may desire.

Very cordially yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair refers the communication, with the accompanying proposed joint resolution, to the Committee on Education and Labor.

LANDS FOR INDIANS OF FORT MOHAVE RESERVATION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to reserve certain lands on the public domain in California and Nevada for the use and benefit of Indians of the Fort Mohave Reservation, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PAYMENT OF CREEK EQUALIZATION CLAIMS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation providing for the payment of certain Creek equalization claims and repealing a provision contained in the Deficiency Appropriation Act of June 19, 1934, relative to a judgment rendered by the Court of Claims in favor of the Creek Nation, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following memorial of the House of Representatives of the State of Arkansas, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Whereas our whole Nation has been stirred to sympathetic activity by the unprecedented catastrophe visited upon so great a portion of our Nation in the form of devastating floods; and

Whereas our own beloved State is suffering in the present crisis on account of inadequate protection, and thousands of our citizens are being left homeless, disease is being spread, and hundreds are perishing on account of the present floodwaters; and

Whereas we feel that if the proper authorities would take cognizance of the flood conditions which are now imperiling our State and its citizenship conditions could be remedied: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Fifty-first General Assembly of the State of Arkansas, That we memorialize the Congress of the United States now in session to expedite the passage of the "flood relief" bill, and that legislation be speedily enacted providing for permanent flood relief by a spillway from the Arkansas River to the Gulf of Mexico, beginning near Yanco-pin, Ark., and extending through the lowlands of eastern Arkansas, and through the State of Louisiana to the Gulf of Mexico, in order that the present suffering citizens of this great Nation have some present relief and be assured of some adequate, permanent protection, to the end that some assurance could be given that the terrible conditions of 1927 and the horrible events of 1937 would not be repeated, and that our great Government would protect its loyal people.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

Senate Joint Resolution 5

Senate joint resolution relative to memorializing and petitioning the Congress to enact legislation distributing the revenues obtained from naval petroleum reserves on the same basis as the revenues from other public lands leased under the provisions of the Mineral Leasing Act

Whereas section 35 of the act of Congress approved February 25, 1920 (41 Stat. 437), known as the Mineral Leasing Act, provides that 52½ percent of all amounts derived by the United States from bonuses, royalties, and rentals from leased oil or gas lands shall be paid into, reserved, and appropriated as a part of the reclamation fund created by act of Congress approved June 17, 1902, and that 37½ percent of all amounts so derived shall be paid to the State within the boundaries of which such leased lands are located; and

Whereas this method of distribution of revenues received from this limited, exhaustible, and nonrecurring natural resource does recognize and does establish the fair and equitable policy, which is in the national interest, that the area of origin should participate in the revenue received therefrom as a measure of compensation for the permanent loss of such natural resources and for the exemption from taxation which occurs due to continued ownership of such lands by the United States; and

Whereas nearly all of the revenues from such leases is from lands in the Western States, where water development is a paramount necessity; and

Whereas the distribution of the revenues from this source to the Bureau of Reclamation to be expended in upbuilding the permanent agricultural resources by the construction of water stabilization and control projects, thereby making water available for irrigation and hydroelectric power; the control of floods, improvement of navigation, and other purposes is sound and just public policy; and

Whereas naval petroleum reserves are created by Executive order of the President from public lands of the United States, and leases thereon are made under the provisions of said Mineral Leasing Act; and

Whereas section 35 of said act further provides "that all moneys which may accrue to the United States under the provisions of the act from lands within naval petroleum reserves shall be deposited in the Treasury as 'miscellaneous receipts' ", so that neither the State in which such lands are located nor the Navy Department of the United States nor the Bureau of Reclamation receives any benefit from the bonuses, royalties, or rentals, as the petroleum or gas produced from said lands is such that it can only be used by the Navy for purposes of sale; and

Whereas the total revenues from oil and gas leases under the Mineral Leasing Act since February 25, 1920, have been approximately $131,000,000, of which more than $32,000,000, or more than 25 percent of such revenues, have been from naval petroleum reserves; and

Whereas if the State of California had received 37½ percent of the revenues from lands within naval petroleum reserves situate in California since the adoption of said act up to June 30, 1936, the State of California would have received an additional $11,906,209.39; and

Whereas if the Bureau of Reclamation had received 52½ percent of the revenues from the lands within naval petroleum reserves since the adoption of said act up to June 30, 1936, the Bureau of Reclamation would have received an additional $17,114,390.79; and

Whereas naval petroleum reserves in addition to those now existing may be created at any time, which, under existing law, would deprive the Bureau of Reclamation and the respective States of revenues now being received or which otherwise would be received; and

Whereas it is not equitable that the oil reserves for the Navy be obtained in a few States to the material detriment of such States, without affording participation in the revenues from leases in such reserves in line with the fair division recognized and provided for in the Mineral Leasing Act as applying to the public domain: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California jointly, That the Legislature of the State of California hereby memorializes and petitions the Congress to enact legislation which will provide that the revenues heretofore or hereafter received from bonuses, royalties, and rentals under the Mineral Leasing Act approved February 25, 1920 (41 Stat. 437), from lands within naval petroleum reserves, 52½ percent shall be paid into, reserved, and appropriated as a part of the reclamation fund created by act of Congress, known as the Reclamation Act, approved June 17, 1902, and 37½ percent of the revenues received from such bonuses, royalties, and rentals shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury, after the expiration of each fiscal year, to the State within the boundaries of which the leased lands or deposits are located.

Resolved, That a copy of this joint resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States, to the Vice President of the United States, and to each Member of the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the memorial of the Baltimore (Md.) Branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, remonstrating against the enactment of the bill (S. 419) to promote the general welfare through the appropriation of funds to assist the States and Territories in providing more effective programs of public education in its present form, and favoring the making of amendments thereto so as to provide safeguards against race discrimination, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference and printing in the RECORD a resolution adopted by the House of Representatives of the State of Connecticut concerning the proposed change in the Supreme Court of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be received, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and, under the rule, printed in the RECORD.

The resolution is as follows:

Resolution concerning the proposed change in the Supreme Court

Resolved by this house, That we urge the Senators and Representatives of Connecticut, the Constitution State, in the Congress of the United States to oppose the astounding proposal of the President of the United States with regard to the United States Supreme Court. The adoption of the President's plan would make the Court subservient to the will of the Executive.

The life of the Federal Government is threatened by anything which tends to break down the independence of any of the three great departments—executive, legislative, and judicial.

The Declaration of Independence itself puts forth as a prominent grievance justifying the Revolution the subservience of judges to the British Crown.

An independent judiciary is the sole protector of the people against illegal or unconstitutional acts. Whatever attacks that strikes against the very citadel of popular liberty and the temple of private justice.

We look to our Senators and Representatives in Congress to keep faith and to "preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States"; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state is directed to immediately send a certified copy of this resolution to each Senator and Representative in the Congress of the United States from Connecticut.

Mr. HUGHES presented the following resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Delaware, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Whereas the President of these United States, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, has recommended to the Congress certain reforms in the Federal judiciary; and

Whereas there is great need of expediting the business before the said judiciary: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the members of the House of Representatives of the State of Delaware do hereby endorse each and all of the reforms recommended and suggested by our President, Franklin Delano Roosevelt; be it further

Resolved, That the members of the House of Representatives of the State of Delaware request United States Senators JAMES H. HUGHES and JOHN G. TOWNSEND, JR., and Representative WILLIAM F. ALLEN to lend their full support to the recommendations of the President; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the said Senators and Representative.

Mr. MALONEY presented a resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Connecticut, protesting against the enactment of pending legislation, recommended by the President, proposing to enlarge the membership of the Supreme Court of the United States, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

(See resolution printed in full when presented today by Mr. LONERGAN.)

Mr. MALONEY also presented a resolution adopted by the Central Committee of United Polish Lodges of Torrington, Conn., favoring the naming of a United States battleship in honor of Count Casimir Pulaski, brigadier general in the Continental Army, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

REFUND OF CERTAIN PROCESSING TAXES

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I present a letter from the president of the Manufacturing Retail Bakers Association of the Eastern States, together with resolutions adopted by that association at a meeting in New York City, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the letter and accompanying resolutions were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BROOKLYN, N. Y., February 5, 1937.

HON. ROYAL S. COPELAND,
United States Senator, Capitol, Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: In order to bring to your attention an unbearable situation and to appeal to you for aid in clearing this situation by appropriate legislation, a mass meeting was held at the Hotel Astor, New York, on January 5, and resolutions passed to forward to you with our most respectful request to give same your kind consideration with a view to straighten out our unfortunate situation.

In hope that the existing inequities may be removed by your activities in behalf of the oppressed who passed the attached resolutions, we are,

Respectfully yours,

MANUFACTURING RETAIL BAKERS ASSOCIATION OF THE EASTERN STATES, WILLIAM STEINMETZ, President.

Resolution adopted at mass meeting at Hotel Astor, January 5, 1937

Whereas, pursuant to Federal laws subsequently declared unconstitutional, the processors of grain and the manufacturers of flour collected on behalf of the Government millions of dollars in processing taxes from hundreds of retail bakers, either directly or through jobbers; and

Whereas a great part of the funds so collected was never turned over to the Government as intended, but was impounded in court or held by the processors pending the judicial determination of the constitutionality of said taxes; and

Whereas after the said taxes were declared illegal, all funds impounded were ordered returned to the processors; and

Whereas these processors now hold in trust and are duty-bound to return such funds to their rightful owners, the purchasers of the flour, who paid the processing tax; and

Whereas numerous processors, though professing their desire to return said funds, refuse to do so because the present "windfall or unjust enrichment" tax prohibits them from doing so; and

Whereas said "windfall" tax provides, in essence, that (a) processors shall be taxed 80 percent of the amount so collected and retained by them and never turned over to the Government, (b) but exempts those processors from said tax who shall have returned such funds to their vendees, pursuant to bona-fide contracts between themselves and their vendees, entered into on or before March 3, 1936, (c) in which case said vendees shall be subject to the "windfall" tax (d) unless they can show that they did not pass on that tax to the public but sustained it as a business loss; and

Whereas the processors were able to pass on the tax to the vendees, the retail bakers, thereby sustaining no loss and the vendees did not and could not pass the tax on to their customers, the consuming public, thereby sustaining great loss, running into millions of dollars; and

Whereas the retail bakers, not having passed on the tax, but having sustained it as business loss, would be exempted from the operation of the "windfall" tax were the funds now held in trust for them returned by the processors; and

Whereas the retail bakers face the loss of millions of dollars due to the arbitrary provision of the said "windfall" tax in that it penalizes the baker who paid his tax to the processor without a written contract and thereby prevents the processors from returning said funds to the vendees: Now, therefore, it is

Resolved, That the Manufacturing Retail Bakers' Association of the Eastern States petition Congress to amend the said "windfall" tax provision so as to provide that processors holding funds collected pursuant to the Agricultural Adjustment Act be authorized to return said funds to their respective vendees without regard to whether said taxes were collected pursuant to a written contract, or, in the alternative, extending the time within which refunds may be made without regard to any written contract from June 1, 1936, to March 15, 1937, and permitting amendment of returns filed prior to such extended date to show such refunds; and it is further

Resolved, That this association appoint a committee to consult with Congressmen and Senators of the Eastern States, or any other Federal officers or agencies, on any and all matters contained within this resolution, and to prepare any and all memoranda, briefs, and documentary data to effectuate such purpose; and it is further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to all Federal officials and agencies concerned.

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes", approved July 1, 1902 (32 Stat. 663; U. S. C., title 34, sec. 506), as provides:

"The Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, is authorized to pay all civilian employees appointed for duty in the Philippine, Hawaiian, and Samoan Islands, the island of Guam, and the island of Porto Rico, from the date of their sailing from the United States until they report for duty to the officer under whom they are to serve, and while returning to the United States by the most direct route and with due expedition, a per-diem compensation corresponding to their pay while actually employed; and in cases where the appointee is not to fill an existing vacancy his pay while traveling may be charged to the annual appropriation of the bureau concerned", is hereby amended to read as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, is authorized to pay all civilian employees appointed for duty beyond the continental limits of the United States, and in Alaska, from the date of their sailing from the United States until they report for duty to the officer under whom they are to serve, and while returning to the United States by the most direct route and with due expedition, compensation at a rate corresponding to their rate of pay while actually employed."

SELECTION BOARDS FOR PROMOTIONS IN MARINE CORPS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1118) to amend section 7 of the act approved May 29, 1934, entitled "An act to regulate the distribution, promotion, retirement, and discharge of commissioned officers of the Marine Corps, and for other purposes."

Mr. McNARY rose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Senators will please be in order so business may be transacted in orderly fashion.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I rose to inquire about the nature of the bill just reported by the clerk. I could not understand it because of the confusion in the Chamber.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, apparently this is an important measure. I suggest that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] explain its purpose.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the highest rank in the Marine Corps is major general. The next highest rank is brigadier general. In the consideration of promotions from the grade of brigadier general to that of major general, there being only three major generals in the Marine Corps, there is not a sufficient number of major generals in the Marine Corps to pass upon the qualifications of brigadier generals in line for promotion. Under the present law the line officers of the Navy are alone eligible to be appointed to the selection board for promotions in the Marine Corps from brigadier general to major general. The number of officers selected for the selection board may be nine and not less than six.

As we have always three major generals in the Marine Corps, it is thought desirable that those major generals, who have special knowledge of the brigadier generals, namely, the men in the rank just below their own rank, should be members of the selection board, as well as some of the line officers of the Regular Navy of the grade of rear admiral.

The bill would give authority to the Secretary of the Navy to name two or three of the major generals of the Marine Corps to the selection board for the consideration of promotions from brigadier general to major general in the Marine Corps. The bill was sent to us and recommended by the Navy Department. If enacted into law, we will be able to have on this special selection board in the Marine Corps not only line officers of the Navy but also some of the highest ranking Marine Corps officers. In the opinion of the Naval Affairs Committee, the bill has much merit.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 7 of the act entitled "An act to regulate the distribution, promotion, retirement, and discharge of commissioned officers of the Marine Corps, and for other purposes", approved May 29, 1934 (48 Stat. 812), is hereby amended by inserting after the word "Provided", the words "That the selection boards appointed to recommend brigadier generals of the line for selection for promotion to major general of the line shall be composed of officers of the permanent rank of major general on the active list of the Marine Corps deemed available for such duty by the Secretary of the Navy and officers of the line of the Navy on the active list with the permanent rank of rear admiral: Provided further,", so that the said section as amended will read as follows:

"SEC. 7. That selection boards shall consist of not less than six officers on the active list of the Marine Corps, the composition and procedure of the boards to be determined by the Secretary of the Navy: Provided, That the selection boards appointed to recommend brigadier generals of the line for selection for promotion to major general of the line shall be composed of officers of the permanent rank of major general on the active list of the Marine Corps, deemed available for such duty by the Secretary of the Navy and officers of the line of the Navy on the active list with the permanent rank of rear admiral: Provided further, That no officer shall be recommended for advancement unless he shall have received the recommendation of not less than two-thirds of the members of the board."

NAVY MEDALS AND BADGES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1114) to prohibit the unauthorized wearing, manufacture, or sale of medals and badges issued by the Navy Department, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person who knowingly wears, manufactures, or sells any decoration or medal authorized by the Congress for the naval forces of the United States, and service medal or badge awarded by the Navy Department, and ribbon, button, or rosette of any of the said medals, badges, or decorations issued by the Secretary of the Navy, or any colorable imitation or miniature of any of them, except when authorized to do so under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy, shall upon conviction be fined not more than $250 or imprisoned not longer than 6 months, or both.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I think we should have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the bill merely applies to the Navy a law which now applies to the Army. It would prohibit the wearing, manufacture, or sale of medals and badges awarded by the Navy Department except under naval regulations. The Navy has had attention called to the fact that medals and insignia are manufactured and offered for sale to anyone who will pay a few dollars therefor. This would give the Navy Department the same authority with reference to such matters that the Army now has.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the bill apparently applies to the manufacture of medals and badges. I can understand why Congress should prohibit the wearing of unauthorized badges and medals.

Mr. WALSH. The bill prohibits the manufacture unless authorized under regulations issued by the Navy Department.

Mr. BORAH. I have not read the details of the bill. I merely read the title.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Massachusetts if a business has grown up in which persons or corporations manufacture medals and badges and sell them to anyone who will buy them? What is the extent of the wrong that is sought to be corrected?

Mr. WALSH. Frankly, I cannot inform the Senator except that the Navy Department states there is such a wrong and that the Army has authority to prohibit the manufacture and sale of badges and medals without authority, and that the Navy ought to have the same authority. It has come to be an abuse that the Department considers should be suppressed by law.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I can well understand why we should prohibit wearing them unless authorized, but when we undertake to prohibit their manufacture it would seem to me there might be business institutions which lawfully manufacture these articles, and I would not assume that we should give the Army or the Navy the authority to say whether or not they might manufacture them. Of course, I am assuming that manufacturing these things is a general business.

Mr. WALSH. The bill would prohibit the manufacture except when authorized "under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy." It would not prohibit the manufacture of badges or decorations, but it would prohibit it unless done under regulations of the Navy Department.

Mr. BORAH. It would leave to the Army and the Navy exclusively the authority to say who should manufacture them.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the reason for that appears in the report which has just been brought to my attention. On page 1 of the report accompanying the bill is this statement:

There has come to the attention of the Navy Department the fact that specimens of Navy service or campaign medals and insignia in regulation sizes are offered for sale to any person who will pay a few dollars therefor.

Mr. WALSH. That is the fact.

Mr. ROBINSON. The report further states:

It appears that the purchaser's authority to wear such medals or insignia is not questioned, and that certain stores are in a position to furnish replicas of these various medals, badges, and insignia as desired.

That, I think, implies the reason for limiting the manufacture of these articles. It appears that there has grown up the business of manufacturing these medals and soliciting persons to purchase them without regard to whether they are entitled to possess them or to use them. If a medal or badge issued by the Navy Department has any value, if it confers any distinction, it is necessary to prevent its sale to persons who are not authorized to receive and display it.

Mr. WALSH. And impositions have been made upon the public by persons displaying these badges who have not any authority to wear them.

Mr. ROBINSON. Naturally, if one sees another wearing a naval badge, he assumes that it is a mark of distinction conferred for some service or because of the demonstration of some special ability; and if the sale of these badges and medals is to be promiscuous, there can be no regulation of their use.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, what I should like to know is whether or not there are manufacturing establishments which manufacture these badges, and so forth.

Mr. WALSH. I suppose some of them could be made by individuals.

Mr. BORAH. It seems to me the purpose desired to be accomplished would be served by making it illegal or criminal to wear badges when the wearer is not entitled to them.

Mr. ROBINSON. That would not be effective for the simple reason that there is no one to go around and take note of the persons who would be abusing that kind of privilege. Persons who attend public receptions where such badges are worn see many individuals wearing them. No one has a disposition to inquire into the right of the individual to wear or display the badge. These are comparatively few in number; and encouragement ought not to be given to the business of manufacturing and selling such badges. If that is done, the badges themselves lose their character and lose their merit, if they have any merit.

Mr. WALSH. Why should not the Secretary of the Navy have authority to regulate the material and making of badges and insignia of the Navy Department?

Mr. BORAH. That is all right. There is no objection whatever to that.

Mr. WALSH. That is all this bill proposes to do. It provides that if a person manufactures these badges, he must comply with the regulations of the Navy.

Mr. BORAH. But the man who is wearing the badge, who is not entitled to do so, knows it, and he should be made responsible.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Idaho if there is not another phase of the matter. I think nearly all American citizens have a very high respect and regard for ex-service men who have won the Distinguished Service Cross. A man wearing that insignia probably appeals to the charity or aid or other support of any citizen. It is rarely that a person would ask him to display the card of promotion that accompanies the award of the Distinguished Service Cross. I think the proposed legislation is not only a protection of the honor of the decoration but it is a protection against fraud upon a community; and I do not see how we can guard against the illegal distribution of these decorations unless there is a pretty good control over their manufacture.

Mr. BORAH. It would be much more difficult to control the manufacture than to control the man who wears the decoration when he ought not to do so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION OF PARIS, 1937

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to return for a moment to the order of reports of committees, in order that I may report from the Committee on Appropriations, without further amendment, Senate Joint Resolution 70, relating to the participation by the United States in the International Exposition of Paris, 1937, for which the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] yesterday sought to obtain consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The report will be received and placed on the calendar.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, because of the emergency which I stated yesterday, and the desire of the House of Representatives, as I am informed, to act upon this joint resolution on Monday under suspension of the rules, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the joint resolution at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, it will be recalled that I objected to the consideration of the joint resolution when it was brought forward yesterday, because, while proposing an appropriation, it had been reported from a committee other than the one having general jurisdiction of appropriations. I should like to ask if the Appropriations Committee has acted favorably upon the joint resolution.

Mr. GLASS. It has.

Mr. McNARY. Unanimously?

Mr. GLASS. I should not say unanimously. The Appropriations Committee was polled in order to avoid the necessity of having a meeting; and 16 members of the committee, which is much more than a majority, have joined in agreeing to a favorable report upon it.

Mr. McNARY. In view of that statement, I shall withhold any opposition.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which had been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations on the 10th instant with an amendment, on page 3, line 7, after the word "hereby", to strike out "authorized to be appropriated" and insert "appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated", so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That in addition to the authority heretofore granted by the joint resolution, approved April 10, 1936, relating to the participation by the United States in the International Exposition of Paris, 1937, the Commissioner General and the Commissioner are hereby authorized to make such expenditures as may be necessary for the purpose of purchasing, constructing, or renovating exhibits, for the proper housing of exhibits (including the decoration, operation, and maintenance of buildings by contract without regard to the provisions of section 3709, Revised Statutes, or otherwise, and the payment of any obligations heretofore or hereafter incurred in connection with the employment of architects and engineers and reimbursement of their necessary travel expenses), and for the transportation of material and exhibits from the United States to France, and from France to the United States after the close of such exposition.

SEC. 2. Notwithstanding the provisions of section 3 of such resolution of April 10, 1936, the Commissioner General is authorized, without regard to the civil-service laws, to appoint, and without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, to fix the reasonable compensation of, such officers and employees as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this resolution and of such resolution of April 10, 1936. This section shall be effective as of April 10, 1936.

SEC. 3. (a) Any functions granted to the Commissioner General and the Commissioner jointly may be exercised by either of them, and any authority herein granted to the Commissioner General may be delegated to the Commissioner or to any other person that the Commissioner General may designate for the purpose.

(b) The approval and certification of expenditures under this resolution, and the submission of accounts and vouchers, shall be made in the manner prescribed in section 4 of such resolution of April 10, 1936, except that any functions of the Secretary of State under such section may, in his discretion, be delegated, without release of responsibility, to any person he may designate for the purpose.

(c) Nothing in this resolution shall be construed to permit any indebtedness to be incurred in excess of the amount herein authorized to be appropriated.

SEC. 4. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for carrying out the purposes of this resolution and of such resolution of April 10, 1936, the sum of $150,000, and the unexpended and unobligated balance of any sums heretofore appropriated pursuant to the authorization contained in such resolution of April 10, 1936, shall also be available for the purposes of this resolution.

SEC. 5. The Commissioner General and the Commissioner are, with the approval of the Secretary of State, authorized to make available to any governmental agency such part of the sums heretofore or hereafter appropriated for the purposes of this resolution and such resolution of April 10, 1936, as may be effectively used by such agency to aid in carrying out such purposes.

SEC. 6. At the close of the exposition or when the connection of the Government of the United States therewith ceases, the Commissioner General and the Commissioner shall return all borrowed property and exhibits to their points of origin and shall dispose of any portion of the material contributed as may be unused or any property purchased in such manner as the Secretary of State may direct in the best interests of the Government, and account therefor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The said Secretary of the Navy is also authorized hereby to transfer to the city of San Diego, Calif., free from all encumbrances and without cost to said city of San Diego all rights, title, and

EXTENSION OF PRIVILEGES OF SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 832) to amend the act entitled "An act to extend to certain publications the privileges of second-class mail matter as to admission to the mails", approved June 6, 1900, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to extend to certain publications the privileges of second-class mail matter as to admission to the mails", approved June 6, 1900, is amended by inserting after the words "State departments of agriculture" the words "or by State departments of conservation (including any State agencies performing functions similar to those of State departments of conservation)."

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of that bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the bill was introduced by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. It seems that in 1900 the Congress passed an act allowing the privileges of second-class mail matter to State departments of agriculture. This bill merely adds to those enjoying that privilege State departments of conservation. On the theory that it was a proper grant of privilege to State departments of agriculture, the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads believed that the same privilege should be extended to State departments of conservation. They therefore reported the bill favorably, and I think it should pass.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if this bill becomes a law, I ask the Senator whether application may not be made by all departments of State and municipal governments which have to deal with what may be denominated public or quasi-public matters to have the same privilege?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; that is possible, of course. Here is a law which was passed in 1900, however; and the first application to extend it at all—and it is in the interest of conservation—is made 37 years afterward. I do not believe certain other departments suggested by the Senator could obtain the privilege. I think it is proper for State departments of agriculture to have it, and I think it is proper for State departments of conservation to have it.

Mr. KING. I shall not oppose the passage of the bill; but I believe it will be the entering wedge to demands for a like privilege by many agencies in municipalities and in States and in various organizations of the Federal Government; and I believe we shall have a very heavy financial burden to meet through additional appropriations.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am quite sure that will not be the case; but, if it is, the Senator from Utah and I will both undertake to stop it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RALPH C. IRWIN

The bill (H. R. 3112) for the relief of Ralph C. Irwin was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the appointment of Ralph C. Irwin as regular village letter carrier at Brea, Calif., on the 16th day of March 1929, shall hereafter be held to have been regularly and duly made as of that date, and he shall be entitled to compensation from that date in accordance with the laws and postal regulations governing appointments and promotions for length of service.

RENEWABLE 4-YEAR-TERM STAR-ROUTE CONTRACTS

The bill (S. 740) to provide for the issuance of renewable 4-year-term contracts to qualified star-route contractors and subcontractors, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McCARRAN. Let the bill go over.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Nevada a question about the bill before it goes over. Is there a report from the committee on the bill?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; there is a report.

Mr. McCARRAN. Apparently, there is no report.

Mr. POPE. I have not been able to find any report.

Mr. McCARRAN. The committee has made a change by way of amendment.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Regular order.

Mr. McKELLAR. The consideration of the bill has been objected to. I do not know whether or not the Senator has sent in a report.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, a report was made, but for some reason it was not printed.

Mr. McKELLAR. The author of the bill has asked to have it go over, and by the next call of the calendar we shall have the report.

Mr. POPE. I think I am favorably disposed toward the bill, but I should like to see the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection having been made, the bill will be passed over.

HOLDING OF CIVIL OFFICE BY CERTAIN RETIRED OFFICERS

The bill (S. 1116) to amend section 1860 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, to permit retired officers and enlisted men of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps to hold civil office in any Territory of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, at the request of the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], I am going to ask that that bill go over, as he desires to make some inquiry regarding it; but before the bill goes over I should like to make a brief statement about it.

The Revised Statutes originally stated that no person belonging to the Army or the Navy could be "elected to or hold any civil office or appointment in any Territory." Later, in 1882, the Revised Statutes were changed by adding at the end of the clause the words "except officers of the Army on the retired list."

At that time all the Territories of the United States were within the continental limits of the United States, except Alaska. At present there are no Territories within the continental limits of the United States, and with the exception of Alaska, all the possessions of the United States that are not within the regularly admitted States are insular. Obviously, retired naval personnel are as well fitted for civil office in outlying islands as are Army officers. In fact, naval officers now hold civil office in certain possessions that are not organized and incorporated Territories, such as Guam and Samoa, the Governors of which are officers of the Navy.

In view of the present provisions of section 1860, Revised Statutes, as amended, retired personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps cannot now hold civil office in Alaska, Hawaii, or Puerto Rico.

In order to permit retired naval and Marine Corps personnel, both officers and enlisted men, to hold civil office in present organized Territories, in the same manner in which retired officers of the Army may now hold such offices, the Navy Department recommends that existing law be amended to read as indicated in the bill. It is the opinion of your committee that the same law ought to apply to naval officers as to Army officers, and that is the purpose of the bill, which is introduced at the request of the Navy Department. However, at the request of the senior Senator from Iowa, I ask that the bill may be passed over for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

GIFTS AND BEQUESTS TO THE NAVY DEPARTMENT

The bill (S. 1123) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to accept gifts and bequests for the benefit of the Office of Naval Records and Library, Navy Department, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to accept, receive, hold, and administer gifts and bequests of personal property, and loans of personal property other than money, from individuals or others for the benefit of the Office of Naval Records and Library, Navy Department, its collection or its services. Gifts or bequests of money shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States as trust funds under the title "Office of Naval Records and Library Fund."

SEC. 2. Gifts or bequests for the benefit of the Office of Naval Records and Library, Navy Department, its collection or its services, shall be exempt from all Federal taxes.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized, upon the request of the Secretary of the Navy, to invest or reinvest the trust funds, or any part thereof, deposited in the Treasury pursuant to section 1 of this act in securities of the United States Government or in securities guaranteed by the United States Government. The interest accruing from such securities shall be deposited to the credit of the Office of Naval Records and Library Fund.

JOHN W. THOMASON

The bill (S. 1112) awarding a Navy Cross to John W. Thomason was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That John W. Thomason, major, United States Marine Corps, be awarded, and he is hereby authorized to receive, a Navy Cross, to be prepared under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, for extraordinary heroism in the battle of Soissons on July 18, 1918, in destroying a machine-gun nest and capturing two machine guns.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1280) to repeal an act of March 3, 1933, entitled "An act to provide for the transfer of powder and other explosive materials from deteriorated and unserviceable ammunition under the control of the War Department to the Department of Agriculture for use in land clearing, drainage, road building, and other agricultural purposes", was announced as next in order.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, this bill may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

SALE OF WAR DEPARTMENT REAL PROPERTY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1281) to authorize the sale of surplus War Department real property, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to sell or cause to be sold, in the manner and upon such terms as he shall deem expedient, the cemetery properties hereinafter designated and to execute and deliver in the name of the United States of America and in its behalf any and all contracts, conveyances, or other instruments necessary to affectuate such sale and conveyance, and that the expense of sale shall be paid from the proceeds thereof, and the net proceeds deposited in the Treasury to the credit of miscellaneous receipts:

Laurel Hill Cemetery, Baltimore, Md., approximate area, five-tenths of an acre.

Confederate lot, Greenlawn Cemetery, Indianapolis, Ind., approximate area, five-tenths of an acre.

Point Lookout, Confederate Cemetery, Md. (tracts nos. 1 and 2), approximate area, 5.5 acres.

Camp Dennison Cemetery, near Cincinnati, Ohio, approximate area, six hundred and twenty-eight one-thousandths of an acre.

Cave Hill National Cemetery, Louisville, Ky. (site of superintendent's lodge), approximate area, twenty-two one-hundredths of an acre.

Mobile National Cemetery, Mobile, Ala. (Freedman's lot), approximate area, 1.5 acres.

Mr. McKELLAR. I should like to have the Senator from Texas explain this bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the bill relates only to small pieces of property in various cemeteries when such pieces of property are no longer necessary for use by the War Department.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF ARTICLES OF WAR

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1282) to amend articles of war 50½ and 70, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the third and fifth paragraphs of article of war 50½ (41 Stat. 797–799) be amended by adding to each of said paragraphs the following: "Provided, That the functions prescribed in this paragraph to be performed by the President may be performed by the Secretary of War or Acting Secretary of War."

SEC. 2. That article of war 70 (41 Stat. 802) is hereby amended by inserting in the first line of the second paragraph after the word "referred" the words "to a general court martial", so that the first sentence of said paragraph will read as follows: "No charge will be referred to a general court martial for trial until after a thorough and impartial investigation thereof shall have been made."

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, will not the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs give some explanation of the change in the court-martial procedure called for by this bill? I understand that the President will not be required to take action which he is now required to take if this amendment to the Articles of War shall be enacted.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, this bill proposes to amend Articles of War 50½ and 70. As to article 50½ the purpose of the bill is to relieve the President from the burden now imposed upon him by that article to take action in the course of a court-martial case which would not require Executive action except for defects in the proceedings found to exist upon review by the Judge Advocate General and when this finding is questioned by the board of review. As to article 70, the bill simplifies procedure in minor cases which are tried by summary and special courts martial.

Mr. DUFFY. But the Secretary of War would have the last word?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Secretary of War would have the last word, except as to the minor cases where the last word rests with the reviewing and confirming authority.

Mr. DUFFY. In the main, the court-martial procedure would not be changed?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The regular court-martial procedure would be unchanged, except, as stated above, where the Judge Advocate General and the board of review differ on procedure.

Mr. DUFFY. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORTING OF COURTS MARTIAL BY ENLISTED MEN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1283) to increase the extra pay of enlisted men for reporting, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter enlisted men detailed to serve as stenographic reporters for general courts martial, courts of inquiry, military commissions, and retiring boards, while so serving, shall receive extra pay at the rate of not exceeding 10 cents for each 100 words taken in shorthand and transcribed, such extra pay to be met from the annual appropriation for expenses of courts martial, etc.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator from Texas explain this measure.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, at the present time an enlisted man who is a stenographer, or who is studying stenography, and can be utilized in a court-martial case, may be detailed for such purpose, but receives only 5 cents a folio of 100 words for his transcript. In order to encourage men to study for this class of work, this measure provides that they shall receive 10 cents a folio, whereas if the Army authorities employ outside reporters they have to pay them 25 cents a folio.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHANGE OF NAME OF THE CHEMICAL WARFARE SERVICE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1284) to change the name of the Chemical Warfare Service, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Chemical Warfare Service, created by the act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat. 768), shall hereafter be known as the Chemical Service.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, why should the name be changed?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, under this bill the title will be "Chemical Service, War Department." At present it is called "Chemical Warfare Service, War Department", involving a redundant use of the word "war", and suggests a more martial significance for a laboratory and research service than the character of the service justifies, exciting outbursts of pacifist indignation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ISSUE OF ARMS FOR PROTECTION OF PUBLIC PROPERTY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1285) to amend that provision of the act approved March 3, 1879 (20 Stat. L. 412), relating to issue of arms and ammunition for the protection of public money and property, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provision relating to issue by the Secretary of War of arms and ammunition for protection of public money and property, contained in the act of March 3, 1879 (20 Stat. L. 412), be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"That upon the request of the head of any department or independent agency of the Government, the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue arms, suitable accouterments for use therewith, and ammunition whenever they may be required for the protection of the public money and property, and they may be delivered to any officer of the department or independent agency designated by the head of such department or independent agency, to be accounted for to the Secretary of War, and to be returned when the necessity for their use has expired: Provided, however, That hereafter the cost of all ammunition issued, the cost of replacing borrowed arms and accouterments which are lost or destroyed or are irreparable, the cost of repairing arms and accouterments returned to the War Department, and the cost to the War Department of making and receiving shipments under the authority of this act shall be covered by transfer of funds from the department or independent agency concerned to the credit of War Department funds."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I inquire of the Senator from Texas whether this bill applies to those having charge of public moneys in municipalities and in States.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Oh, no; it applies merely to other departments of the Government. At present the War Department must lend the other departments all the arms and ammunition they request, and without pay for damage or loss, in the event any other department requires ammunition and arms for guarding public property under its jurisdiction. This measure provides that the other departments will have to take care of the loss, damage, and transportation expense in such cases out of their own appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROCUREMENT OF SUPPLIES WITHOUT ADVERTISING

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1287) to authorize the procurement, without advertising, of certain War Department property, and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever proposals are invited for furnishing articles of military supply, the character or ingredients of which, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, are of such a nature that the interests of the public service would be injured by publicly divulging them, the chief of the supply service concerned is authorized to purchase such articles in such manner as he may deem most economical and efficient: Provided, That this act will not be construed as in any way amending the act of July 2, 1926 (44 Stat. 780), or as authorizing the open market purchase of airplanes for purposes other than as provided in that act. All laws and parts of laws which are inconsistent herewith or in conflict with the provisions hereof are hereby repealed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of this bill. Why should there not be advertisement?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, this bill would apply where the property is of a confidential nature, and where it is to the interest of the Government that it be not known publicly what property is being purchased.

Mr. KING. What property would fall into that category, if the Senator feels like imparting the information?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I shall be glad to give the Senator what information I think can properly be disclosed.

This measure provides that whenever proposals are invited for articles of military supply the character or ingredients of which, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, are of such a nature that the interests of the public service would be injured by publicly divulging them, the chief of the supply service concerned is authorized to purchase such articles in such manner as he may deem most economical and efficient.

The bill carries a provision to the effect that its provisions will not be construed as in any way amending the act of July 2, 1926, relative to the procurement of aircraft, or as authorizing the open-market purchase of airplanes for purposes other than as provided in the act of July 2, 1926.

Congress has heretofore granted authority to the Chiefs of Ordnance, the Chemical Warfare Service, and the Signal Corps to make purchases without advertising in instances where the character of the materials concerned requires secrecy. The War Department advises that it desires to extend this authorization to other War Department supply services. It seems that proper safeguards are thrown around the matter.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it seems to me it is a rather serious departure from the existing law, and may involve great expense to the Government, because it will deny competition and tend to monopolistic control of commodities which the Government may desire to acquire.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Permit me to say to the Senator further that, in view of the fact that the Secretary of War must pass upon the need for the purchases, and in view of the further fact that the accounting agencies of the Government will still have opportunity to check disbursements for such purchases, we feel that ample safeguards are provided.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FLOOD-RELIEF LOANS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I hesitate to interrupt the call of the calendar, but, on account of the emergency and the desire to get the bill to the other House of Congress as soon as possible, I am going to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 1439, to provide for loans made necessary by floods or other catastrophes in the year 1937, reported earlier today from the Committee on Banking and Currency, with amendments, by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY] and myself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, let the bill be read, and then let the Senator from Kentucky make a statement showing the emergency, if one exists.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read the bill as proposed to be amended.

The legislative clerk read the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency with amendments, on page 1, beginning in line 3, to strike out "That the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is hereby authorized and directed to create, in such manner as it may determine, a Disaster Loan Corporation, and to subscribe to its nonassessable capital stock in an amount not to exceed $20,000,000, and to pay therefor out of the unexpended balance of the $50,000,000 which Reconstruction Finance Corporation was authorized to lend for catastrophe relief by section 1 of the act of April 17, 1936 (Public, No. 525, 74th Cong.)" and in lieu thereof to insert "That there is hereby created a Disaster Loan Corporation with nonassessable capital stock in an amount not to exceed $20,000,000. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and directed to subscribe for such stock and to make payment therefor from time to time as called out of the unexpended balance of the $50,000,000 which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was authorized to lend for catastrophe relief by section 1 of the act of April 17, 1936 (Public, No. 525, 74th Cong.). Such Disaster Loan Corporation shall be managed by officers and agents to be appointed by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation under such rules and regulations as its board of directors may prescribe"; and on page 2, after line 7, to insert "The Disaster Loan Corporation shall have succession until dissolved by act of Congress; shall have power to sue and be sued in any court, to adopt and use a corporate seal, to make contracts, and to acquire, hold, and dispose of real and personal property necessary and incident to the conduct of its business; and shall have such other powers as may be necessary and incident to carrying out its powers and duties under this act", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby created a Disaster Loan Corporation with nonassessable capital stock in an amount not to exceed $20,000,000. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and directed to subscribe for such stock and to make payment therefor from time to time as called, out of the unexpended balance of the $50,000,000 which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was authorized to lend for catastrophe relief by section 1 of the act of April 17, 1936 (Public, No. 525, 74th Cong.). Such Disaster Loan Corporation shall be managed by officers and agents to be appointed by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation under such rules and regulations as its board of directors may prescribe.

Such Disaster Loan Corporation shall be empowered to make, upon such terms and conditions and in such manner as it may prescribe, such loans as it may determine to be necessary or appropriate because of floods or other catastrophes in the year 1937. Such Disaster Loan Corporation may use all its assets, including capital and net earnings therefrom, in the exercise of its functions.

The Disaster Loan Corporation shall have succession until dissolved by act of Congress; shall have power to sue and be sued in any court, to adopt and use a corporate seal, to make contracts, and to acquire, hold, and dispose of real and personal property necessary and incident to the conduct of its business; and shall have such other powers as may be necessary and incident to carrying out its powers and duties under this act.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, this bill is one made necessary by the floods which have recently occurred in the Ohio and Mississippi and other valleys, and which have not yet completely subsided.

There was a conference a few days ago among all the agencies which have any authority either to lend or grant funds for the relief of flood sufferers and those who have lost their property as the result of this greatest national disaster. The consensus at the conference was that, with the possible exception of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, which is not involved, all the agencies have all of the authority they need and sufficient funds to enable them to grant relief except the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has under its general authority now full power to make loans for industrial purposes, in which event they are required to exact adequate security. They are making loans of that sort, and can still make them, and they have ample funds available now for that purpose. We do not touch that phase of their activity.

Following the floods of last year in New England and in Pennsylvania Congress appropriated $50,000,000 to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the purpose of making loans to those who suffered in those areas affected by the floods of last year, and that appropriation was limited to floods and other disasters occurring in the year 1936.

So no part of that fund is now available for relief, or for loans, or for any other purpose, as the result of floods occurring in 1937. Out of that $50,000,000 the Reconstruction Finance Corporation made some $8,000,000 in loans, and has practically $42,000,000 left of that fund. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is still receiving applications from persons located in the area flooded in 1936, and is still making loans to such persons.

The bill now under consideration proposes to create within the Reconstruction Finance Corporation a Disaster Loan Corporation; and out of the $42,000,000 the R. F. C. still has left of the fund made available last year it is authoried and directed to subscribe to the stock of the new corporation proposed to be set up by the bill, in order that it may differentiate the loans proposed to be made under the terms of the bill under consideration from industrial loans, in connection with which there is some exactness required as to security, and even from the loans made last year, in connection with which it is provided that such security may be required as may reasonably be expected to insure repayment.

The terms of this bill are such as to give the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, through the new corporation proposed to be set up within it, more liberal authority and broader power to make loans of a certain character and nature without demanding such security as has been required in connection with the making of previous loans.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. As I understand, there is no restrictive language in the bill providing for security of any kind.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is correct.

Mr. McNARY. Money can be given the applicant in the nature of a grant?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; it cannot be in the nature of a grant. It has to be in the nature of a loan; but the character of the security, of course, will be left to the discretion of the new corporation formed under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

As the Senator from Oregon knows, many thousand persons have had all their property swept away; their homes have been damaged; in many cases their entire businesses have been ruined and the furnishings in their houses washed away or destroyed. Many of those persons are unable to go to a bank and make what is called a bankable note by putting up the exact security which a bank requires. Many of them do not desire to depend upon the Red Cross or some charitable organization in order that they may obtain $200, $300, $500, $600, or $1,000 in order to rehabilitate their homes or their businesses. The object of this bill is to make it possible for such citizens, whose cases are equally meritorious with the cases of others, to obtain loans under such terms as they may be able to meet and based upon such security as they may be able to give, if they can give any, all of it being left to the discretion and judgment of the proposed new organization.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. It is to be noted that there is a limitation of $20,000,000 as the aggregate amount which may be loaned by the corporation. Had the committee information, or has the Senator from Kentucky information, as to the extent to which these loans will be applied for? In other words, how far will $20,000,000 go toward providing the funds that may be used in accordance with the terms of the proposed act?

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator that when we first sought to frame this legislation our idea was to make available the entire unexpended balance of the $50,000,000, amounting to something like $42,000,000; but after further conference with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and with others interested in the passage of the measure it was thought not desirable to tie up that entire fund in these particular loans, and it was also thought that $20,000,000, which is somewhat in the nature of a revolving fund, will be sufficient; but if it is not sufficient, we may at any time authorize the corporation to subscribe for more of the stock up to the limit of the unexpended balance.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. Is there any limitation upon the amount which may be loaned to one individual?

Mr. BARKLEY. There is no limitation in the bill as to the amount which may be loaned to one individual.

Mr. COPELAND. That is left wholly to the corporation to determine?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes. It is impossible to foresee what situations may arise. The loans involved will all be small ones, because anyone who is qualified to obtain a large loan may make application for it under existing law under which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized to operate.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. I have attempted hastily to peruse the bill in order to learn its nature. I have not concluded my reading of the bill. Does the bill limit the applications for loans to those suffering from the present disaster due to the floods in the Mississippi River and tributary rivers?

Mr. BARKLEY. It limits the applications for loans only to persons suffering from a flood or other catastrophe during 1937, but not to the present particular flood disaster on the Mississippi River and its tributary rivers.

Mr. McNARY. The bill has universal application to catastrophes occurring during the year 1937?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. I am not going to oppose the bill. The bill is probably commendable. The method proposed is somewhat different from the method under which similar situations have heretofore been handled. There is no effort to obtain adequate security under the terms of the bill, or to secure the best security obtainable. What is done is more or less in the nature of a grant. Later we are to pass a flood bill which will take care of the flood situation without any attempt to take money out of the funds of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. I do not know what purpose the bill now under consideration has as distinguished from an actual distress bill, a bill carrying a sufficient appropriation, and one that is based more or less upon an agency of the Government which loans money upon some form of security.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know to just what bill the Senator from Oregon has reference, which is coming later, to provide for relief out of funds otherwise than through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. We have just passed a bill appropriating money for the relief of flood sufferers; and later, of course, it is contemplated to enact permanent legislation dealing with flood control, which will be a long-time program.

The bill now under consideration is intended to afford relief to a very large class of worthy persons who do not desire to ask for charity, but who cannot make loans at banks and give what would be called adequate security for such loans. The bill under consideration liberalizes the power of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans on such security as it may, in its judgment, require.

Mr. McNARY. Under the language of the bill, is any security whatever required beyond the personal application of the applicant?

Mr. BARKLEY. The language does not describe the sort of security to be required.

Mr. McNARY. That was just a supposition entertained by the distinguished Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. In view of the record of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, I think we may not anticipate that it is going to exempt anyone who can provide security from the requirement that he give security for a loan. However, as the Senator knows, there are thousands of persons who could not meet any requirement for security that would be regarded as ample.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, in view of the very able statement made by the distinguished Senator from Kentucky, I shall not interpose any objection.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. MALONEY. I should like to make an observation and to ask the Senator from Kentucky a question.

I am a member of the committee which considered the bill now under discussion. The question now in my mind did not arise in the committee hearing, due, I think, to the fact that we were unanimously in sympathy with the great effort of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY] to have this bill acted upon and to afford relief to the people in the stricken area.

We understood in the committee—or, at least, I did, and I think it was the general understanding—that the purpose of creating the Disaster Loan Corporation was better to provide quick and more liberal relief. Heretofore, when floods have occurred—and some of them have been serious—since the creation of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Corporation itself, with its regular organization, has handled relief loans in its regular course of business dealing with loans. Does not the Senator think it was the sense of the committee that the creation of the proposed corporation was just for the purposes I have stated, and that we did not expect that there would be any additional administrative expense in connection with the new corporation?

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator is correct on that point. The only additional administrative expense would possibly be due to the necessity of having the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, or the new corporation proposed to be formed within the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, send to the stricken communities someone who represented the corporation in order that needy persons might make application on the ground, without having to come to the State headquarters of the organization, at some expense to themselves. Furthermore, it was felt that the formation of the proposed corporation was advisable in order that these loans might be set apart as different in type from the regular loans that are being made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation through its ordinary agencies.

For instance, there may be in some flooded city an industrial plant which has already made application to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for a loan, and has already put up such security as it has been able to put up, or has otherwise satisfied the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and has received a loan at a rate of interest agreed upon by the parties. If the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, through its regular agencies, went into that community at this time to make loans on a different basis, with a different rate of interest, and providing for a different type of security, if indeed any security at all were required, it might create some misunderstanding as between citizens in the same community as to why certain applicants could not obtain loans on bases similar to those upon which other citizens received loans.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I understand how such matters are handled. A serious flood occurred in my section of the country last year, so I know how the Reconstruction Finance Corporation sends its representatives into the stricken areas. One thing disturbs me, though not to a great extent; but I think that I, as a member of the committee, should say to the Senator from Kentucky and to the Senate itself that I am a little bit fearful that in providing that something shall be done which is intended only to meet an acute situation, a new agency or bureau may be created. I do not think a flood administrator should be appointed or a group of highly paid persons employed simply to administer the provisions of the bill under consideration.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator that it is contemplated that this entire organization will be set up out of the personnel of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. MALONEY. I was sure that was the Senator's thought, and I felt certain it was the feeling of the committee.

Mr. BARKLEY. Any additional cost will be so nominal as to be of no great importance.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. Recently a number of requests have come to me dealing with the subject of loans of money to those whose homes or businesses have been damaged by the present flood. Some of them are large business concerns. Some have lost $100,000. Some have lost as high as $500,000. They are hard-pressed for money. They would not come under the terms of the bill now under consideration, but the Reconstruction Finance Corporation could take care of their applications.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; the Reconstruction Finance Corporation can take care of their application now.

Mr. LOGAN. Then there is another class of small-business men, men owning grocery stores, men owning drug stores, who have lost their stock of goods. Perhaps the damage in individual cases of that kind runs from $5,000 to $15,000. Suppose such a concern were a going concern, it could still come to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and apply to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation under the law as it now exists?

Mr. BARKLEY. It could, but it might also apply under the provisions of the bill now under consideration. For instance, let us assume that the owner of a little corner grocery in any of the flooded towns had his entire stock washed away, so that he had nothing left. If he has good credit, such as would appeal to a bank, he may go to his local bank and borrow money and set up a new store; or, in some instances, it might be possible for the wholesaler to advance the stock and allow it to be paid for over a term of months or years.

However, if that person is serving a good cause in the community, supplying food and other necessary commodities or facilities to the people, and his entire stock has been washed away and he is not in a position to make what would be called a bankable loan, and might not be able to give what is called adequate security, he may borrow money under this bill for the purpose of restocking his store if the R. F. C., through the proposed corporation, should feel that, in its judgment, such a loan ought to be made. Of course, however, the bill does not interfere with the present authority of the R. F. C. to make all loans it now can make or heretofore could make under the authority to make industrial loans.

Mr. LOGAN. The third class, which is much more numerous, is comprised of those who lost their household goods, in whose houses the paper has come off the walls, the plastering has fallen, or the plumbing fixtures are out of repair and they have no property to offer the bank as collateral. I presume that this bill is intended primarily for that large class that need immediate relief.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to my colleague that the Home Owners' Loan Corporation now has authority to advance money in addition to what it has already advanced on property on which it holds mortgages. It would, of course, have to do that in order to protect its own mortgages. The Farm Credit Administration has power to do the same thing. So that class probably will not be among those who will make application for loans under this proposed act.

Mr. LOGAN. What about the Housing Administration?

Mr. BARKLEY. The Federal Housing Administration only comes into the picture by guaranteeing the loans of a certain type over a certain period. Today the Banking and Currency Committee have reported a bill extending the authority of the Federal Housing Administration to make such guarantees up to 20 percent until 1939; but no actual Government money goes into a loan under the Housing Administration.

There is a large class of people who are not connected in any way with the Home Owners' Loan Corporation or the Farm Credit Administration or the Housing Administration, who have no loans and have borrowed no money from those organizations, and whose property has been damaged, whose furniture has been entirely destroyed, and who need a sort of credit that they may obtain upon liberal terms. This bill is intended to make it possible for that class and other similar classes to borrow money and to pay it back over a term of months or years. I may say to my colleague that the lendings of the R. F. C. in the flood areas in 1936 have resulted in a most satisfactory ratio of repayments. The borrowers are now paying back at the rate of $5, $10, $15, or $20 a month the money they borrowed, and collections are really very creditable to those who obtained the loans.

Mr. LOGAN. One other question, and I will finish. I am not asking it because I myself do not know, but because the people in the flooded area are watching everything that goes into the RECORD and they desire information. If any one seeks a loan under this bill, if it shall pass, say, in the cities of Louisville or Paducah or Cincinnati, would he go to the representative of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and make his application there?

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, in Louisville he would go to the State director's office, which is in Louisville. The R. F. C., however, have no office in Paducah or Owensboro or any other city in Kentucky, but they have cooperated with the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, which does have a branch office in Paducah and in Owensboro, on the Ohio River. Where they have no office at all, they have sent their representatives in order that prospective borrowers may make application on the ground without having to travel to headquarters.

Mr. LOGAN. There is one objection only to that, and that will be soon cleared up, perhaps, and that is there are now some parts of Kentucky and some cities where a representative cannot be sent because he cannot get there, and the need now is fairly great. I do not know how cases of that kind would be handled.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not able to say how soon, either before or after the complete subsidence of the waters in the cities, the representatives of the R. F. C. will be able to get on the ground, but I think we may depend upon it that as soon as it is practicable there will be somebody in the community who will be authorized to advise those who may want to make these loans and to provide for the filing of the applications.

Mr. LOGAN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. BULKLEY. I merely wish to confirm what I think the Senator has already very well said; that the legislation now proposed is intended to be interpreted by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation very liberally; that it is advisedly that we leave the question of security entirely to their discretion; and that, in making these loans, they are to have regard rather to the need of the borrowers that has been created by the disaster than to the amount of security that can be given, although, of course, character and ability to repay are to be taken into consideration.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator is correct about that. If that were not so, this proposed legislation would not be necessary, because anybody who can meet the requirements of credit can already obtain a loan from a bank or from the R. F. C. under its present authority; but this is an exceptional situation, and the bill is intended to create an exceptional type of credit under exceptional security provisions, in the judgment of the corporation.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President——

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POPE. In the creation of this new corporation to make this class of loans to many potential beneficiaries, would there be any additional expense in the way of administration of the corporation?

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] just asked me that question a moment ago, and I replied that the additional expense would only be nominal. No new employees are proposed; the corporation is to be set up within the R. F. C. and is to be officered by it, and it will make these loans through its regular facilities. The only additional expense that I can anticipate is the possibility of having to send some representatives into territory where they do not now go in order to make these loans available immediately in the community.

Mr. POPE. There will be no more expense in that case than if we amended the original act and should give the power directly to the R. F. C.?

Mr. BARKLEY. None whatever.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendments reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS OF TURTLE MOUNTAIN BAND OF CHIPPEWA INDIANS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the next bill in order on the calendar.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 95) referring the claims of the Turtle Mountain Band or Bands of Chippewa Indians of North Dakota to the Court of Claims for finding of fact and recommendations to the Congress, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, in section 1, page 2, line 3, after the word "rights", to strike out "as recognized by the officials of the United States", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claims of the Turtle Mountain Band or Bands of Chippewa Indians of North Dakota, including the band of Chief or Thomas Little Shell and other isolated bands of Chippewa Indians of North Dakota and Montana, of whatsoever nature, not heretofore determined and adjudicated on their merits by the Court of Claims or the Supreme Court of the United States, arising under or as the result of violation of any treaty, act of Congress, agreement, Executive order, or treaty with any other tribes or nations of Indians, or relating to, affecting, or otherwise violating the land occupancy or other rights of said band or bands of Indians are hereby referred to the Court of Claims, and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon said Court of Claims to proceed, according to the principles of law and equity, to find the facts with reference to any claim or claims presented hereunder and report the same to the Congress, together with recommendations hereinafter referred to. The said court shall consider all such claims de novo, without regard to any decision, finding, or settlement heretofore had in respect of any of such claims.

SEC. 2. That any and all claims against the United States under this act shall be forever barred unless the said Turtle Mountain Band or Bands of Indians shall within 3 years from the date of the approval of this act file a petition or petitions in said court setting forth said claims. The claim or claims of the band or bands aforementioned may be presented separately or jointly by petition or petitions, subject, however, to amendment in the discretion of the court at any time prior to final hearing in the matter. The petition or petitions shall be verified by the respective attorney or attorneys employed to prosecute such claim or claims under contract with the Turtle Mountain Band or Bands of Chippewa Indians, approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, as provided by law. Official letters, papers, documents, reports, and records, or certified copies thereof, may be used in evidence; and the departments of the Government shall give access to the attorney or attorneys of said Turtle Mountain Band or Bands to such treaties, agreements, papers, reports, correspondence, or records as may be needed by the attorney or attorneys of said band or bands of Indians.

SEC. 3. That said court shall determine the facts as to all claims submitted hereunder, and shall make findings of fact and recommendations to the Congress thereon, notwithstanding lapse of time or statutes of limitation; any payment which may have been made by the United States upon any claim so submitted shall not be pleaded as an estoppel, but may be pleaded as a set-off; and the United States shall be allowed credit for any sum or sums proved to have been heretofore paid or expended directly for said band or bands of Indians subsequent to the date of any law, treaty, agreement, or Executive order under which the claims arise.

SEC. 4. That said court is hereby authorized and empowered to make findings of fact and to report the same to the Congress of the United States, together with recommendations, (1) relative to any loss sustained by said Indians by reason of the delay in ratification of the agreement of 1892 (33 Stat. 189); (2) as to the acceptance of the amendments made by Congress to said agreement of 1892, whether the acceptance of said amendments by the Indians was voluntary or whether made under compulsion or duress, and as to the loss or damage sustained by said Indians by reason of any action on the part of the United States in securing said acceptance; (3) whether said agreement of 1892 was consented to and ratified by the band of Chief or Thomas Little Shell and the amount of any loss to said band resulting from actions taken under said agreement without the consent of said band; (4) whether said lands to which the band of Chief or Thomas Little Shell had title by occupancy were taken from it without the consent of said band and the value thereof; (5) as to any losses, as near in amount as can be determined, sustained by said Indians by reason of the appropriation of lands ceded by said agreement of 1892 prior to its ratification, and the failure of the United States to reserve sufficient lands to enable the said Indians, including the band of Chief or Thomas Little Shell, to obtain suitable and adequate allotments as provided in said agreement; (6) the costs incurred by said Indians in acquiring allotments on the public domain as a result of any violation of said agreement; (7) as to whether, under said agreement of 1892, the said band or bands of Indians by mistake or otherwise ceded lands which were intended to be retained as a reservation, in particular an area lying about 30 miles west of Red River, being 15 miles in width, for a distance of 65 miles along the Canadian border, and the value of said tract at the time of said cession; (8) as to whether the United States, by Executive order, set aside approximately 1,000,000 acres of the territory occupied by said Indians as a reservation for any other Indian tribe or tribes, without compensating said Indians for the land so taken; (9) whether said Indians had legal or equitable title to said lands so set aside for any other tribe or tribes of Indians, and the reasonable value of said lands at the time of the issuance of the said Executive order; (10) as to the negotiation and execution of said agreement of 1892, and whether the United States obtained cessions of land thereunder from said band or bands of Indians in violation of or contrary to the terms of said agreement authorizing said cessions of lands; (11) whether the United States obtained lands from said Indians under mistake of fact; (12) whether the consideration paid by the United States under said agreement of 1892 was adequate and whether any lands were taken from said band or bands of Indians without paying any consideration therefor. Said court shall make its findings with respect to all claims presented hereunder, including any and all other claims which may be presented to the court by said band or bands of Indians not specifically hereinabove set forth, and shall report said findings to the Congress, and shall determine the value of said lands under said claims at the time they were ceded to or taken from said Indians by the United States, and shall recommend to the Congress such amount as may appeal to the conscience of said court under the principles of equity and justice as proper to be paid to said band or bands of Indians in payment for the lands so taken, and damages suffered, including interest thereon from the date of such taking, and in full satisfaction of all claims determined pursuant to this act.

SEC. 5. Upon the final determination of such suit or suits the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to recommend a reasonable fee, not to exceed 10 percent of the recovery in each instance, together with all necessary and proper expenses incurred in preparation and prosecution of the suit or suits, to be paid to the respective attorneys employed by the said band or bands of Indians under contracts approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior as provided by law, and the same shall be included in the findings of said court and shall be paid out of any sum or sums appropriated by the Congress pursuant to this act. The court shall have jurisdiction and is hereby further authorized to determine and recommend to the Congress what amounts, if any, shall be awarded to the respective bands who bring suit or suits hereunder.

SEC. 6. The Court of Claims shall have full authority by proper orders and process to bring in and make parties to such suit or suits any other tribe or band of Indians deemed by it necessary or proper to the final determination of the matters in controversy. A copy of the petition or petitions shall, in such case, be served upon the Attorney General of the United States, and he, or some attorney from the Department of Justice to be designated by him, is hereby directed to appear and represent the interests of the United States in such case.

SEC. 7. The proceeds of all amounts, if any, found to be due said Indians and duly appropriated by the Congress, less fees and expenses, shall, upon said appropriation, be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the said band or bands of Indians as found by said court to be entitled thereto.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS OF CROW TRIBE OF INDIANS

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 55) to amend the act of July 3, 1926, entitled "An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and render judgment in claims which the Crow Tribe of Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes" (44 Stat. L. 807), which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, on page 3, line 3, after the word "such", to strike out "treaty" and insert "treaty,", so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That section 1 of the act of July 3, 1926, entitled "An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and render judgment in claims which the Crow Tribe of Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes" (44 Stat. L. 807), be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows: "That jurisdiction be, and is hereby, conferred upon the Court of Claims, with right of appeal (not by writ of certiorari) to the Supreme Court of the United States by either party, notwithstanding lapse of time or statutes of limitations, to hear, adjudicate, and render judgment on the merits in any and all claims arising under or growing out of the treaty of Fort Laramie, dated September 17, 1851 (Fourth Kappler, p. 1065), between the United States and the Crow Indian Nation, and the treaty dated May 7, 1868 (15 Stat. 649), between the United States and the Crow Indians of Montana, or arising under or growing out of the agreement between the River Crow Tribe of Indians and the United States, dated July 15, 1868 (Third Kappler, p. 714); the Executive order dated July 2, 1873 (First Kappler, p. 855), or any subsequent Executive order; the act of Congress approved April 15, 1874 (18 Stat. 28), or any subsequent act of Congress or agreement with said Crow Indian Nation, including claims growing out of any cessions of land by said Indians to the United States for an inadequate consideration under mistake of fact, irrespective of any treaty stipulation entered into under such mistake of fact, which said Crow Indian Nation or any branch thereof may have against the United States, which claims have not heretofore been determined and adjudicated on their merits by the Court of Claims or the Supreme Court of the United States. Jurisdiction also is hereby conferred upon the said courts to determine whether or not any provision in any such treaty, agreement, Executive order, or act of Congress above set forth has been violated or breached by any act or acts of Congress or by any treaty made by the United States with any other Indian tribe or nation, and to render judgment for the damages resulting therefrom: Provided, That for complying with the terms of this joint resolution, case no. H-248, in the Court of Claims, entitled 'The Crow Nation or Tribe of Indians of Montana v. the United States', decided on March 4, 1935, is hereby reinstated."

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS OF ASSINIBOINE INDIANS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 641) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment in any claims which the Assiniboine Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, in section 1, on page 2, line 12, after the word "provision", to strike out "on" and insert "in", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted etc. That jurisdiction be and is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States by either party, notwithstanding anything in the Judicial Code of the United States to the contrary and without regard to the lapse of time, former adjudication, or statutes of limitation, to hear, examine, adjudicate, and render judgment in any and all claims arising under or growing out of the treaty of Fort Laramie of September 17, 1851 (11 Stat. L. 749), between the Government of the United States and the Assiniboine Indian Nation and other Indian nations therein specified, or any subsequent act of Congress, treaty, agreement, or Executive order or treaty with any other Indian tribe, or any nation that violates any of the rights of the Assiniboine Indian Nation arising under or growing out of the said treaty, which said Assiniboine Nation or Tribe may have against the United States; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the said court to determine whether or not any provision in such treaty has been violated or breached by the Government of the United States by acts of Congress or otherwise; and if so, to render judgment for the damages resulting therefrom.

SEC. 2. Any and all claims against the United States within the purview of this act shall be forever barred unless suit be instituted or petition filed as herein provided in the Court of Claims within 5 years from the date of the approval of this act such suit shall make the Assiniboine Nation or Tribe party plaintiff and the United States party defendant. The petition shall be verified by the attorney or attorneys employed to prosecute such claim or claims under contract with the Assiniboines, approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior.

Official papers, letters, documents, records, including records of evidence heretofore taken before the Court of Claims pertaining to the subject matter of the suits herein authorized, or certified copies thereof, may be used in evidence, and the departments of the Government shall give access to the attorney or attorneys of such Indian nation to such treaties, papers, correspondence, or records as may be needed by the attorney or attorneys of said Indian nation.

SEC. 4. That if it be determined by the court that the United States, in violation of the terms and provisions of any Executive order, law, treaty, or agreement set forth and referred to in section 1, has unlawfully appropriated or disposed of any money or other property belonging to the Indians, damages therefor shall be confined to the value of the money or other property at the time of such appropriation or disposal, with a minimum value of lands at 93 cents per acre. With reference to all claims which may be the subject matter of the suits herein authorized, the decree of the court shall be in full settlement of all damages, if any, committed by the Government of the United States and shall annul and cancel all claim, right, and title of the said Assiniboine Indians in and to such money or other property.

SEC. 5. Upon final determination of such suit or suits, the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to fix and determine a reasonable fee for services heretofore or hereafter rendered the Assiniboine Nation, not to exceed 10 percent of the recovery, together with all necessary and proper expenses heretofore or hereafter incurred in preparation and prosecution of the claims and suits, to be paid to the attorneys employed by said tribe or nation of Indians who have heretofore prosecuted and shall hereafter prosecute said claims and suits, and the same shall be included in the decree and shall be paid out of any sum or sums found to be due said tribe.

INDIAN AFFAIRS—LAWS AND TREATIES

The resolution (S. Res. 60) authorizing a preparation of laws and treaties relating to Indian affairs was read, considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs is hereby authorized to have prepared for the use of the Senate a compilation of the laws, agreements, Executive orders, proclamations, and so forth, relating to Indian affairs passed and proclaimed since March 4, 1927, including the Seventy-fifth Congress, to be known as Laws and Treaties Relating to Indian Affairs, Volume 5.

CLAIMS OF KIOWA, COMANCHE, AND APACHE TRIBES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 149) to refer the claims of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Tribes of Indians to the Court of Claims, with the absolute right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, in connection with the title of the bill it will be noted that the bill carries what is termed in the title as an "absolute right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States." Will the Senator from Oklahoma, the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, give an explanation of the necessity for that provision?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. An identical bill passed the Senate last year and went to the House, where it died for want of attention. The pending bill is a copy of the bill passed by the Senate last year. I will be very glad to have it passed over, if the Senator desires.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not care to ask that it go over. I think there should be a right of appeal, but the language that is used is somewhat unusual.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The word "absolute" is probably superfluous.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well; I have no objection to the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, adjudicate, and render final judgment on all legal or equitable claims of whatsoever nature which the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Tribes of Indians may have against the United States, arising under or growing out of any treaties, agreements, or the enactment of laws by Congress, or the taking of any lands of said tribes by the United States without the payment to said tribes of adequate compensation therefor, or out of any maladministration or wrongful handling of any of the funds, land, or other property belonging to said tribes or held in trust for them by the United States, or otherwise; including, but without limiting the generality of the foregoing, (1) a claim for additional compensation to said tribes for the taking, by the United States of certain tribal lands ceded to them by treaty or treaties with the United States but taken from them by the United States under the act of June 6, 1900 (31 Stat. 677, ch. 313), allegedly without compliance with the terms of the treaty or treaties under which such lands were ceded to such tribes, and taken for a compensation allegedly below the value of the lands so taken; (2) claims for the replacement of certain tribal trust funds allegedly improperly or unlawfully expended by the United States in its management of the said funds of said tribes.

SEC. 2. The Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Tribes of Indians are hereby empowered to bring such suit, as parties plaintiff, against the United States, as party defendant, by filing their petition in the Court of Claims and serving a copy thereof on the Attorney General of the United States. Such petition shall set forth the facts on which the claim for recovery is based and shall be verified by the attorneys employed by said tribes of Indians in accordance with existing law to prosecute such claims, which may be made upon information and belief and no other verification shall be necessary. Suit shall be instituted within 2 years from the date of this act by the filing of a petition in the Court of Claims in behalf of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Tribes of Indians.

SEC. 3. At the trial of said suit the court shall apply, as respects the United States, the same principles of law as would be applied to any ordinary, private person, and as would be applied to an ordinary fiduciary, and shall settle and determine the rights thereon, both legal and equitable, of said tribes against the United States, notwithstanding lapse of time or statute of limitations. No payment or payments which have been made by the United States to or for the said tribes, nor any gratuities paid to or expended for said tribes or members thereof, shall apply as an estoppel against said suit, but may be pleaded as offsets.

SEC. 4. At the trial of such action so instituted in the Court of Claims, any letter, paper, document, map, or record in the possession of any officer or department of the United States (or a certified copy thereof), or any of the officially printed documents, or records, of the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States (of any session of the Congress) may be used in evidence, and the departments of the Government of the United States shall give full and free access to the attorneys for said tribes to such letters, papers, documents, or records, as may be useful to said attorneys, in the preparation for trial or trials of such action and shall afford facilities for the examination of the same and the making of copies thereof.

SEC. 5. Either party shall have the absolute right of appeal (not by writ of certiorari) from any final judgment entered by the Court of Claims to the Supreme Court of the United States and the Supreme Court of the United States is hereby invested with jurisdiction of such appeal.

SEC. 6. (a) If it shall be determined by the Court of Claims that the United States did receive the tribal lands described in the act of June 6, 1900 (31 Stat. 677, ch. 813), and that the sum paid by the United States to said tribes was less than the reasonable value thereof, the court shall render judgment in favor of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Tribes of Indians for a sum equal to the reasonable value of said lands, less such sums paid by the United States to said tribes under said act of Congress, with interest at the rate of 4 percent per annum from the date of approval of said act of Congress: Provided, however, That the United States may, in lieu of such payment, acquire and hold in trust for said tribes in accordance with existing laws relating to trust lands of said tribes, lands of a value equal to the amount of such judgment.

(b) If it shall be determined by the court that the United States has improperly or unlawfully expended or misappropriated tribal funds of said tribes of Indians, the court shall render judgment against the United States for an amount equal to such funds so found to have been improperly or unlawfully expended or misappropriated with interest thereon at the rate of 4 percent per annum from the date of the said expenditures or misappropriations.

SEC. 7. Upon the final determination of such suit, cause, or action, whether by judgment, compromise, or otherwise, the Court of claims shall decree such fees as it shall find have been agreed to be paid to the attorneys employed therein by said tribes of Indians under contracts negotiated and approved as provided by existing law. The fees decreed by the said Court of Claims to the said attorneys shall be paid out of any sum or sums recovered in such suit or action, or received by compromise, and not otherwise. The expenses of said attorneys, and the expenses in connection with the preparation and prosecution of such action or suit shall be paid out of funds, heretofore appropriated for such purposes, and not otherwise. The net amount of any judgment recovered shall be placed in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the said tribes of Indians, and shall draw interest at the rate of 4 percent per annum, and shall thereafter be subject to appropriation by Congress for the benefit of said Indians.

SEC. 8. A copy of the petition in any suit instituted under this act shall be served upon the Attorney General of the United States and he, or some attorney from the Department of Justice to be designated by him, is hereby directed to appear and defend the interests of the United States.

PAYMENT TO OSAGE INDIANS FOR LANDS SOLD

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 670) authorizing an appropriation for payment to the Osage Tribe of Indians on account of their lands sold by the United States, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $776,742.03, being the net amount received by the United States from the sale of land of the Osage Tribe of Indians in the State of Kansas under article I of the treaty of September 29, 1865 (14 Stat. L. 687), credited to the "civilization fund" on the books of the Treasury of the United States and used for the benefit of Indian tribes other than the Osage, said Osage Tribe of Indians referred to herein now residing in the State of Oklahoma, as found by the Court of Claims in its opinion of May 28, 1928 (66 Ct. Cl. 64), in a case known as B–38, entitled "Osage Nation of Indians against United States of America", instituted under act of February 6, 1921 (41 Stat. L. 1097).

SEC. 2. Said amount, when appropriated, shall be placed in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Osage Tribe of Indians and distributed in accordance with the rules and regulations governing payment of moneys accruing to members of the Osage Tribe of Indians.

SEC. 3. Said appropriations shall be in full, complete, and final settlement of the claim of the Osage Tribe of Indians against the United States arising under the treaty of 1865 above cited.

SEC. 4. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of said appropriation when made, the fees and expenses of the attorneys of record, in accordance with provisions and percentages in their contract as approved by the Secretary of the Interior May 5, 1931.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Oklahoma if the bill provides an appropriation or merely an authorization?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The bill provides merely an authorization. It has passed either the House or the Senate time and time again. It passed the Senate last year but died in the other body. It is simply an authorization to cover the amount and is not an appropriation.

Mr. ROBINSON. What is the amount?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It is about $700,000, as I remember.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator whether that amount has been found to be due by any court or any administrative body of the Government?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, if I may I will make a very brief statement as to the purpose of the bill.

Years ago the Osage Indians had a large tract of land which was sold by the Government. The proceeds were presumed to be used, and under the terms of the sale they were authorized to be used, for the civilization of the Osage Indians. The Bureau of Indian Affairs has spent that money, not for the benefit of the Osage Indians, but of all Indians. The money so spent for Indians other than Osages was expended without the authority or consent of the Osages. For many years they have made claim asking reimbursement of such moneys as have been spent for the civilization of other Indians than the Osages. The Department has considered their claim and have found it to be just and equitable, and recommend the passage of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MUSKOGEE OR CREEK TRIBE OF INDIANS

The bill (S. 1253) authorizing an appropriation to carry out the provisions of section 26 of the agreement with the Muskogee or Creek Tribe of Indians, approved March 1, 1901, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $600,000 to carry out the provisions of section 26 of the act to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Muskogee or Creek Tribe of Indians, approved March 1, 1901 (31 Stat. 861), and said sum shall be in payment of the balance due on the award made by the Senate of the United States in accordance with said section 26 of said act of March 1, 1901.

SEC. 2. Upon appropriation being made and available, the Secretary of the Interior shall pay to the Loyal Creek Indians and freedmen, or their heirs, whose names appear in the list of awards made in their behalf by W. B. Hazen and F. A. Field, as commissioners on behalf of the United States to ascertain the losses of said Indians and freedmen as provided by articles 3 and 4 of the treaty with the Creek Nation of Indians of date June 14, 1866 (14 Stat. 785), and such payment shall be made in proportion to the awards set out in said list, and such payment shall be in full settlement and satisfaction of all claims under said articles 3 and 4.

SEC. 3. That out of the appropriation hereby authorized the Secretary of the Interior shall pay to the attorneys for said Loyal Creek Indians and freedmen, who are now employed under contract with said Indians and freedmen, such compensation as he may determine to be fair and reasonable for services rendered and expenses incurred by such attorneys under said contract: Provided, That such payment shall not exceed 10 percent of the amount appropriated under the authority of this act; and, in addition thereto, the said Secretary shall correspondingly pay William Yarhola and Joseph Bruner for services heretofore rendered and expenses incurred in connection with these claims, such compensation as he may determine to be reasonable and just, not to exceed, however, 5 percent of each separate claim presented and settled under the terms of this act.

CLAIM OF SHOSHONE NATION OF INDIANS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 68) authorizing the Western Bands of the Shoshone Nation of Indians to sue in the Court of Claims, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, with amendments, on page 1, line 5, after the words "United States", to strike out the words "as in other cases", and on page 2, line 5, after the word "acre", to insert the words "from which shall be deducted the estimated expense of surveying and sale, including fees, commissions, and overhead", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction be, and the same is hereby, conferred on the United States Court of Claims, with the right of either party to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, anything in the Judicial Code of the United States and amendments thereto to the contrary notwithstanding, regardless of the lapse of time and the statute of limitations, to hear, examine, adjudicate, and render judgment for such net amount as may be found due on all legal and equitable claims of the Western Bands of the Shoshone Nation of Indians, and the court shall determine and fix as near as may be, from such evidence as may be submitted, the boundaries and acreage of the lands described in article 5, of the treaty of October 1, 1863 (18 Stat. L. 689), and shall compute the value thereof at $1.25 per acre, from which shall be deducted the estimated expense of surveying and sale, including fees, commissions, and overhead, and the court shall also determine and fix the set-offs, if any, under the terms of section 2 of the Second Deficiency Act of 1935 (49 Stat. 596), to determine the net amount due the said Indians.

SEC. 2. The claims of the said Indians under the provisions of this act shall be presented by petition or petitions setting out fully and distinctly all claims of the Western Bands of the Shoshone Indians against the United States within 5 years after the passage of this act, or shall be thereafter forever barred. The petition or petitions may be verified by the attorney or attorneys employed by said Indians under contract executed in accordance with existing law. The departments of the Government shall give access to the attorneys so employed to the records pertaining to said Indians on file thereon.

SEC. 3. The net proceeds of any judgment recovered shall be placed on deposit in the Treasury to the credit of said Indians at 4-percent interest per annum and shall be thereafter subject to appropriation by Congress for the benefit of said Indians, including the purchase of lands and building of homes, and no part of said judgment shall be paid out in per-capita payments to said Indians: Provided, That the court in rendering judgment shall determine and set apart a reasonable fee for and to the attorney or attorneys of said Indians employed in the prosecution of said claims, including the preparation of said claims and the services rendered before the committees of Congress, not to exceed 10 percent of such judgment, if any, and shall also determine the sum to cover all reasonable and proper expenses incurred by the said attorney or attorneys in the preparation and prosecution of said claims, which sums shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury when an appropriation is made by Congress to pay such judgment.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATIONAL EDUCATION ASSOCIATION

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 709) to amend the act entitled "An act to incorporate the National Education Association of the United States", approved June 30, 1906, as amended, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, on page 3, line 5, after the word "National", to strike out the word "Education" and insert the words "Educational", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5 of the act entitled "An act to incorporate the National Education Association of the United States", approved June 30, 1906, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. The qualifications, classifications, rights, and obligations of members of said corporation shall be prescribed in the bylaws of the corporation."

SEC. 2. Section 6 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. (a) The officers of the corporation shall be a president, one or more vice presidents, a secretary, a treasurer, a board of directors, an executive committee, a board of trustees, and such boards, councils, committees, and other officers as shall be prescribed in the bylaws.

"(b) Except as limited by this act, as amended, the bylaws of the corporation shall prescribe the powers, duties, terms of office, and the manner of election or appointment of the said officers, boards, councils, and committees; and the said corporation may by its bylaws make other and different provisions as to the numbers and names of the officers, boards, councils, and committees."

SEC. 3. Section 7 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 7. (a) The board of trustees shall consist of four members elected by the board of directors for a term of 4 years, and the president of the association, who shall be a member ex officio during his term of office. At the first meeting of the board of directors held during the annual meeting of the association at which they were elected, they shall elect one trustee for the term of 4 years. All vacancies occurring in said board of trustees, whether by resignation or otherwise, shall be filled by the board of directors for the unexpired term; and the absence of a trustee from two successive annual meetings of the board shall forfeit his membership.

"(b) The invested fund now known as the 'Permanent fund of the National Educational Association', when transferred to the corporation hereby created shall be held by such corporation as a permanent fund and shall be in charge of the board of trustees, who shall provide for the safekeeping and investment of such fund, and of all other funds which the corporation may receive by donation, bequest, or devise. No part of the principal of such permanent fund or its accretions shall be expended, except by a two-thirds vote of the representative assembly, after the proposed expenditure has been approved by the board of trustees and the board of directors, and after printed notice of the proposed expenditure has been printed in the Journal of the National Education Association at least 2 months prior to the meeting of the representative assembly.

"(c) The income of the permanent fund shall be used only to meet the cost of maintaining the organization of the association and of publishing its annual volume of proceedings, unless the terms of the donation, bequest, or devise shall otherwise specify, or the bylaws of the corporation shall otherwise provide.

"(d) The board of trustees shall elect the secretary of the association, who shall be secretary of the executive committee and shall fix the compensation of the term of his office for a period of not to exceed 4 years."

SEC. 4. Section 8 of such act is amended by striking out in the proviso thereof the following: "by the board of directors, or otherwise."

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator in charge of the bill, who is also the author of it, the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], explain the nature of the amendment of the existing law.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, this bill illustrates the unwisdom, if I may use that expression, of granting Federal charters for private corporations. In 1906 Congress enacted a law to incorporate the National Education Association, and the law provided the number of officers—president, vice presidents, and so forth. The law is found to be unworkable. The organization now has several hundred thousand members, scattered all over the United States. It is their desire to have the act amended, and the bill now before us is unanimously approved by their organization. I have letters from the organization in every State of the Union approving it. This bill is desired so they will not have to elect the same officers without change. They want authority to have their committee on bylaws make such changes in the personnel of the organization, the number of committees, and so forth, as may be necessary for the proper administration of the business of the organization.

The bill is unanimously reported by the committee and is approved by the organization in every State in the Union.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That completes the calendar.

AUTHORITY TO SIGN BILLS

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that during the recess or adjournment of the Senate to follow the session of today the Vice President be authorized to sign enrolled bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ANNIVERSARY OF BIRTH OF THOMAS A. EDISON

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, today is the anniversary of the birth of that outstanding inventor, Thomas A. Edison, a native of Ohio. In the city of Cleveland has been organized a national inventors' day committee for the purpose of securing national observation of February 11 as National Inventors' Day in recognition of the great contributions which the inventors of America have made to our civilization.

I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD at this point a resolution adopted by the Legislature of Ohio relating to this subject. I ask further leave to have printed certain documents explanatory of the movement.

There being no objection, the resolution and documents were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution

Resolved, That the Governor of Ohio, at a reasonable time before the 11th day of February of each and every year, shall by proclamation request that the people of the State of Ohio join with the Nation in the regular annual observance of National Inventors' Day, on February 11, the birth date of Thomas Alva Edison, one of Ohio's most noted sons, for the purpose of paying honor to this great man, and to fittingly pay honor to the many outstanding inventors of Ohio and of the Nation, and thereby also give appreciative recognition and active encouragement to the inventors of the present and of the future who by their creations will continue to enrich living in the present and in the future; and be it further

Resolved, That during the calendar week in which National Inventors' Day occurs the teachers in the schools of Ohio shall be requested to place special study and emphasis upon the lives of outstanding inventors and upon their inventions which have contributed so much to the progress, prosperity, and to the better living of all; and be it further

Resolved, That either on National Inventors' Day or during the calendar week in which February 11 occurs, at a special or the regular meeting time, civic, business, religious, and fraternal organizations be asked to observe, appraise, and to express appreciation for the many inventions which have contributed so largely to national progress, to prosperity, and to better and happier living conditions for all.

THE NATIONAL INVENTORS' DAY COMMITTEE OF AMERICA,
Cleveland, Ohio, February 1, 1937.

The Honorable ROBERT J. BULKLEY,
United States Senator from Ohio,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. BULKLEY: May I call your attention to National Inventors' Day, which had its origin in Cleveland in 1935 (another "first" for Cleveland).

I believe you know of the plan of the Rotary Club of Cleveland to hold a National Inventors' Day Edison program at their meeting on February 11, the birth date of Thomas A. Edison, which, to my knowledge, will be the first National Inventors' Day observance by any club of national prominence in the Nation.

* * * * * * *

I think that you will agree that no one can accuse inventors, as a class, of receiving more than a just share from their inventive efforts, although these have been the basis upon which the greater part of our American progress, prosperity, and better living have been attained. In fact, inventions have been the basis through which a new age has been born. This new age demands an appreciation day for progressive, national inventor's days.

In Thanksgiving Day we have handed down to us the harvest festivities which have been observed by various peoples since the dawn of civilization. In this new-age appreciation day—National Inventors' Day—we have a time in which to more fully appreciate the inventive blessings which the Father has provided for us through the creative visions materialized for our use and enjoyment by inventors and creative engineers.

May I add that we are doing all possible through National Inventors' Day to resell America to Americans—a much-needed activity, if American ideals are to be retained and our Nation is to continue to grow forward to greater progress, prosperity, and a more abundant and satisfying life for all.

I am also enclosing a copy of a resolution which we hope to have passed by the Ohio Legislature. Inasmuch as Ohio was the birthplace of the Nation's most-revered and outstanding inventive genius, we hope that Ohio will be the first State to so honor her illustrious son, Thomas A. Edison.

Should you feel impelled to call National Inventors' Day to the attention of the Members of the Senate and the Nation on February 11, we will be most grateful for your cooperation with us in our efforts to resell America to Americans—a much-needed activity, if America is to grow forward to increased progress, prosperity, and to better and happier living for all.

We want to thank you for your interest and any cooperation you may be able to give.

Most sincerely yours,

FREDERICK J. ROOT,
Executive Chairman.

STATEMENT BY NATIONAL INVENTORS' DAY COMMITTEE

National Inventors' Day is a perpetual memorial to Thomas A. Edison and other inventors of the present and of the future, whose inventive creations will continue to "make" the America of the future, as have those of the present and of the past—a day of public observance, appraisal, and appreciation for our many inventive blessings and a day of hope for better, happier, and more prosperous living for all.

RADIO ADDRESS OF DR. WILLIAM E. WICKENDEN, PRESIDENT OF CASE SCHOOL OF APPLIED SCIENCE, ON THE SUBJECT "THE NATION'S DEBT TO THOMAS A. EDISON, CHARLES BRUSH, AND OTHER AMERICAN INVENTORS" ON NATIONAL INVENTORS' DAY PROGRAM, FEBRUARY 11, 1936

It is particularly fitting that Cleveland should recognize the birthday of Thomas Alva Edison as Inventors' Day, for Cleveland is the lighting capital of the world. It is here that Charles F. Brush perfected his system of electric arc lighting in 1876 and it is here at Nela Park today that Edison's unforgettable work on the incandescent lamp is being carried forward to higher and higher achievements. What Brush and Edison did was to bring electricity out of the laboratory and harness it to the work of the world. High honor was paid to the scientific importance of their work, but its social significance is only beginning to be appreciated. Putting electricity to work was one of the revolutionary events of history. It did for industrial production what the introduction of money back at the early dawn of civilization did for commerce. In our uses of power before Brush and Edison we were back at the barter age. We could use power only where it was produced, and we could change it into only one other form. But electricity became the money of energy. It is not energy itself, but a medium of circulation and exchange. With electricity we could accumulate energy and make it instantly available; we could store it up today and spend it tomorrow or next week, as slowly or as quickly as we wished; we could produce it at one place and spend it at another with very little loss on the way; we could concentrate it enough to melt tons of iron, or subdivide as finely as a whisper in the telephone; finally, we could exchange it for any form of work we desired. Electricity—the money of energy.

Edison, Brush, and their fellow inventors have helped men incalculably in their struggle to get more bread with less sweat. Primitive man toiled single-handed. In 1870 one worker with a machine to help him was equal to about four or five unassisted men. In 1900 the worker and his machine with electric power could match 14 unaided men, in 1930, 60 men. Producing capacity per worker in industry doubled in the 1920's.

Our debt to the great inventors is not merely material, it is cultural and spiritual as well. This is beautifully exemplified in the art of lighting to which Brush and Edison contributed so much.

For most of us the daylight hours are the hours of work and the hours of darkness are the hours of leisure, when learning and culture are possible. So long as there were no dependable sources of artificial light, learning had to be made a special business—something for clerks who could give their daylight hours to it. Until about 500 years ago education was just a thin little trickle in the stream of human experience. For long centuries most men, even kings and princes, were quite illiterate and learning had to be kept alive in monasteries. Books and writings had to be copied by hand, which was terribly tedious and expensive. The great mass of men found living so poor and so hard to get that they had neither time nor means to be anything but ignorant. We call these centuries the dark ages. Then two very significant things happened. Men learned to print books from type, and they learned to make reasonably cheap and efficient artificial lights. These were the work of simple practical men, probably without thought for the refinements of culture, but the results were incalculable.

Immediately the dam which had so long held back the streams of learning began to give way. Books became cheap enough so that many people might have them, and leisure hours were redeemed from gloom and darkness so that men who had to work for a living by day could share in the riches of learning and culture by night. Printing and lighting, two technical arts which we owe to the inventive urge of the modern age, have been the greatest forces in changing education and culture from a tiny trickle to a mighty stream. How blind to think of the inventor as a mere Philistine, an enemy of the human spirit and its culture.

But long after books and periodicals had become cheap and abundant, good light remained dear and scarce. The trouble has been that we know how to produce light only as a byproduct of wasted heat. A candle or a wick dipped in oil could give us only one unit of light for three or four hundred units of power. The kerosene lamp, the gas flame of the Welsbach mantle of our childhood were a little better, but only electricity has been able to give us safe, convenient and inexpensive light. Even at that our more modern lamps give us back as light only 10 or 12 percent of the energy they consume, and it has taken 50 years of the most intensive effort, starting with Brush and Edison, to learn how to do that well. Only the firefly seems to know the secret of cold pure light, and he is holding out on us. Until we learn that secret, the work of Edison and Brush will remain unfinished.

Mr. Roosevelt is trying to reduce the costs of electric light and current to the consumer through political pressure. He may accomplish something, but think how much more the public has at stake in encouraging more research and invention than in any possible legislation. With our best power plants turning only 50 percent of the heat units in their coal piles into electric power and our best lamps turning perhaps only one-tenth of that power into useful light, the possibilities we are not using for lack of knowledge are 30 times as great as our best results. Money spent in training and encouraging future Edisons and Brushes is the best investment society can make.

What great difficulties these pioneers of lighting had to overcome. Picture in your mind a little frame building in New Jersey in 1878. This is the laboratory of an unschooled Ohio boy who has just succeeded in making a machine to reproduce the human voice and is now tackling what the scientists of his day have called the impossible problem of creating a small and interchangeable electric lamp. His method was to try every imaginable possibility in search of a filament that could survive the heat of incandescence. Thirty-six hundred experiments failed; he even tried carbonized hairs pulled from the beard of a fellow worker; at last an experiment, suggested by the merest chance, succeeded.

A carbonized filament of bamboo, stripped from a fan dropped carelessly by a lady visitor, supplied the answer. Edison had to wrestle with Nature and compel her to yield her secrets by main force, because he was trying to leap far ahead of the science of his day. Men knew a great deal about electricity, but they knew very little about light production. The modern inventor does not wrestle with Nature; he wooes her like a lover. He can do this because he works from a solid base of scientific knowledge. The effect of this change in strategy has been to speed the pace of invention almost unbelievably. It took the scientists a thousand years to invent the art of writing. It took the men of James Watt's day 100 years to perfect the steam engine. Fifty years after Faraday produced a dynamo in his laboratory Brush took it out and put it to work. Radio needed 11 years from Hertz to Marconi, and the vacuum tube 7 years from Richardson to deForest. Each year the gaps grow shorter, and it is literally true that yesterday's research is today's invention and tomorrow's necessity for living.

The cure of our economic ills depends on our ability to produce more, better, and cheaper goods. We will honor the pioneers not by halting where they laid down their work but by pushing on where they would have gone.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Lord and Master, look down and behold from Thy habitation of holiness and restrain not Thy mercy toward us. It is blessed to live, yet it is more blessed to live well, for our works do follow us. We make confession: We need more of the sense of divine; Thy covenant Thou wilt not break. Direct this honorable assembly by Thy counsels and give wisdom to all deliberations; make the path of vision plain. Heavenly Father, help us to stand strong in the might of virtue, intelligence, and in that faith wherewith we are made free.

O God of Israel, sound forth through our land, and may our people live in peace and in contentment because they have heard Thy voice, the music of heaven, which is the message of an all-redeeming Father. In our Savior's name. Amen.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the foreign trade-zone bill, and to include excerpts from a speech made on the same subject by the comptroller of the city of New York.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, how much space will these excerpts take?

Mr. CELLER. About a column and a half.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a radio address delivered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

(Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.)

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BINDERUP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 20 minutes on next Tuesday after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand that the Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill is scheduled to come up at that time. I supposed that on occasions when we had general debate on an appropriation bill that Members instead of asking for special orders, were expected to get their time during the debate. I wonder if the gentleman would not do that, if he wants to speak on that day.

Mr. BINDERUP. I am very anxious to comply with all the rules, regulations, and precedents of the House, but I am also very anxious to speak next Tuesday morning if it can possibly be arranged.

Mr. TABER. I think if the gentleman will see the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW] that it can be arranged. The gentleman from Indiana is right here.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I have no question but what if the gentleman from Nebraska desires time on the Treasury-Post Office bill it can easily be arranged.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. TABER. I feel obliged to object under the circumstances.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

Mr. BINDERUP. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my request.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MAHON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein a resolution passed yesterday by the faculty of the University of South Carolina relating to the late John J. McSwain.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER. Under the special order of the House heretofore made, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARLAN] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, those interests that sought defeat of President Roosevelt last November are again on the warpath to wreck his plan for the reorganization of the Federal courts. The volume of their initial howl has undoubtedly frightened the timid and attracted many whose natural inclination is to seek the halcyon days always in the past. The battle cry is: "If you must fortify your New Deal, amend the Constitution; do not pack the courts." Constitutional amendment is proposed because it is almost impossible, needless, and dilatory. Packing the courts is a convenient phrase to crystallize prejudice and escape the necessity of thought. No one is attempting to pack the courts, the real effort being made is to unpack them. To hear these gentlemen with assumed profundity discuss our sacred Constitution and the New Deal program, one would assume that the legislative branch of the Government is embarked upon a campaign of constitutional defiance, and the judicial branch of the Government wholly above human emotion, free from all influence of background, training, and environment, is preserving the document given us by our fathers. Nothing is farther from the truth.

There is no branch of this Government that has attempted to violate the Constitution. The issue between the legislative and the judicial branch of the Government is simply one of the definition of common words in the English language. The Executive is attempting to settle this dispute with as little change in our present machinery as possible. Nothing is advocated by him that the next session of this Congress cannot change. Not a proposal is being made that has not adequate precedent in our history. The problem before him is simply this: Two branches of the Government disagree as to what the constitutional phrase "Commerce among the States" means. The legislative branch contends that it includes all direct steps of production, transportation, and distribution. The judicial branch, at least in its last decision, says that commerce as used in the Constitution means transportation only. The President represents the people. He is their elected official. He was given a mandate by them to carry out the purpose of the New Deal. What should he do under these circumstances? Shall he sit quietly by and watch one branch of the Government exercise an absolute veto over another branch, when he knows that the vetoed branch is carrying out the desires of the people, and the vetoing branch is expressing the ideals of an age that is passed?

The voice of exploitation beseeches us, "Do not destroy the balance of power established in our Government." But where can one find a balance of power when the two elected divisions of our Government have their purposes wholly frustrated by a third nonelected branch, because of a disagreement over the meaning of the phrase "commerce among the States"?

I am not one of those who believe that Congress should have an absolutely free hand in interpreting the constitutionality of its own laws. The history of this body, combined with my 6 years' experience here, has taught me that the influence of organized lobbies is decidedly too powerful in controlling legislation to permit a Congress wholly unchecked by the judiciary.

Even in England, where the cabinet system makes the operation of lobbies almost an impossibility, and where there is no written constitution to guide the action of Parliament, the House of Lords, which in many respects acts more like a judicial body than as a legislative one, has the power to delay legislation long enough to make its operation or defeat a matter of popular will.

While the courts in France do not exercise a control over their legislative branch directly, they do control the activities of their administrative agencies, which has much the same effect.

But there is a long distance between some reasonable control or veto and the absolute veto exercised by our courts. Yet our courts have taken to themselves this power without constitutional grant, and after 150 years it is too late to change that power by anything less than a constitutional amendment.

Assuming then that judicial veto rightfully exists, the Constitution has expressly given the legislative branch a slight counteracting check on this judicial veto. That check is the power of Congress to control the personnel of the courts, and the number of judges. It is this expressly provided constitutional power that the President asks us to exercise. The check which the courts have on Congress is not provided for in the Constitution. The check which Congress has on the courts is provided for, and those who are fearful of creating an unbalance of power by the exercise of this legislative prerogative, which we have frequently exercised in the past, are speaking, I submit, out of their fear of the dark rather than of any substantial danger.

The failure of the legislative and the judicial branches to agree on this question is no greater than is the disagreement between many of the decisions of the Court itself on the same subject. At the time the National Industrial Recovery Act was passed there was adequate foundation in the decisions of the Supreme Court to establish every provision contained therein, excepting possibly the one delegating power to the President. There were also, of course, adequate decisions coming from the same Court to justify the overthrow of the N. R. A. Prior to the Schechter case, 23 Federal, district, and circuit courts had held the act constitutional; and 25 similar courts had held it unconstitutional. I may add that an overwhelming majority of Democratic Congressmen thought it constitutional and just half of the Republican Congressmen and Senators. In effect, we had two constitutions on this subject, and the decision as to which one of these documents should control our future program rested in the emotional slant, the educational background, and the environment of the individual members of the Supreme Court sitting at the time of the decision.

In the case of Burns Baking Co. v. Bryan (264 U. S. 533), Justice Brandeis says concerning the Supreme Court's decision setting aside an act of a State regulating the sale of bread:

> To decide, as a fact, that the prohibition of excess weights "is not necessary for the protection of the purchasers against imposition and fraud by short weights", that is "is not calculated to effectuate that purpose", and that it "subjects bakers and sellers of bread" to heavy burdens is, in my opinion, an exercise of the powers of a superlegislature—not the performance of the constitutional function of judicial review.

Again, in the Standard Oil case (221 U. S. 1), Justice Harlan comments on the fact that the Court is legislating and not construing law by its so-called rule of reason:

> Now the Court, in accordance with what it denominates the "rule of reason", in effect inserts in the act the word "undue", which means the same as "unreasonable", and thereby makes Congress say what it did not say; what, as I think, it plainly did not intend to say; and what, since the passage of the act, it has explicitly refused to say. It has steadily refused to amend the act so as to tolerate a restraint of interstate commerce even where such restraint could be said to be "reasonable" or "due." In short, the Court now, by judicial legislation, in effect amends an act of Congress. * * *

Justice Holmes, criticizing the doctrine of the Court in the child-labor cases, which was the doctrine relied upon to defeat the N. R. A., says in a dissenting opinion (Hammer v. Dagenhart, 247 U. S. 251):

> But I had thought that the propriety of the exercise of a power admitted to exist in some cases was for the consideration of Congress alone, and that this Court always had disavowed the right to intrude its judgment upon questions of policy or morals. It is not for this Court to pronounce when prohibition is necessary to regulation, if it ever may be necessary—to say that it is permissible as against strong drink, but not as against the product of ruined lives.

Let us look at some of the remarks of the members of the Supreme Court themselves concerning the attitude and motivation of the Court in declaring congressional acts unconstitutional. In the case of Pollock v. Farmers Loan & Trust Co. (158 U. S. 601) the Court set aside an income-tax law on the ground that it was unconstitutional. Justice Harlan, dissenting from that decision, said:

> With the policy of legislation of this character (socialism) the Court has nothing to do. That is for the legislative branch of the Government. * * * The safety and permanency of our institutions demand that each department of government shall keep within its legitimate sphere as defined by the supreme law of the land * * * (Pollock v. Farmers Loan & Trust Co., 158 U. S. 601, 674).
> * * * Is it to be understood that the courts may annul an act of Congress whenever, in their judgment, such legislation is not demanded by any public emergency or pressing necessity? Is a tax on income permissible in time of war but unconstitutional in a time of peace? Is the judiciary to supervise the action of the legislative branch of the government upon questions of public policy? * * * The decree now passed dislocates—principally for reasons of an economic nature—a sovereign power expressly granted to the General Government and long recognized and fully established by judicial decisions and legislative action. It so interprets constitutional provisions, originally designed to protect slave property against oppressive taxation, as to give privileges and immunities never contemplated by the founders of the Government. * * *

Justice Moody, in the Employers' Liability Cases (207 U. S. 463), in commenting upon the infallibility of the economic opinions of the Court, says as follows:

> The Court has never exercised the mighty power of declaring the acts of a coordinate branch of the Government void except where there is no possible and sensible construction of the act which is consistent with the fundamental organic law. The presumption that other branches of the Government will restrain themselves within the scope of their authority and the respect which is due to them and their acts admit of no other attitude from this Court. * * * But the economic opinions of the Judges and their views of the requirements of justice and public policy, even when crystallized into well-settled doctrines of law, have no constitutional sanctity. They are binding upon succeeding Judges; but while they may influence, they cannot control legislators. Legislators have their own economic theories, their views of justice and public policy, and their views when embodied in written law must prevail.

The above statement regarding the obligation of the Supreme Court to declare every act of Congress constitutional unless the contrary is shown beyond a reasonable doubt is a repetition of a long line of decisions. Yet we have many cases where three or four judges have declared an act constitutional and the other five or six have said it is unconstitutional. Is such a thing humanly conceivable as that an act of Congress be unconstitutional beyond a reasonable doubt when three or four men, learned in the law and sincere in their work, declare that it is constitutional, reading the same briefs and hearing the same arguments? On their very face such decisions show that the courts are not following their own precedent and that their actions are not motivated by the constitutionality or unconstitutionality of the law but by what the majority conceived to be more for the general welfare of the United States than did the majority of Congress.

Justice Holmes again commenting on the tendency of the Federal Court to override State police power and declaring such decisions to be nothing but the opinion of the Court as to public policy and judicial lawmaking says, in Tyson v. Banton (273 U. S. 418):

> I think the proper course is to recognize that a State legislature can do whatever it sees fit to do unless it is restrained by some express prohibition in the Constitution of the United States or of the State, and they should be careful not to extend such prohibitions beyond their obvious meaning by reading into them conceptions of public policy that the particular court may happen to entertain.

See also the remarks of Justice Stone in United States v. Butler (297 U. S. 1):

> Congress and the courts both unhappily may falter or be mistaken in the performance of their constitutional duty. But interpretation of our great charter of government which proceeds on any assumption that the responsibility for the preservation of our institutions is the exclusive concern of any one of the three branches of government, or that it alone can save them from destruction, is far more likely, in the long run, "to obliterate the constituent members" of "an indestructible union of indestructible States" than the frank recognition that language, even of a constitution, may mean what it says—that the power to tax and spend includes the power to relieve a Nation-wide economic maladjustment by conditional gifts of money."

The remarks of Mr. Francis B. Sayre generally supporting the thesis we are considering today to the effect that the decisions of the Court represent their economic ideas rather than profound legal principle are very interesting. They appear in the Survey for May of 1923:

> The gravity of the adverse decision of the United States Supreme Court in the minimum wage case strikes deep. The fundamental principle upon which our constitutional structure was built was that of a government composed of three separate and coordinate departments—the legislative, the executive, and the judicial. Upon a perfect equilibrium between these three our Government was poised; the undue encroachment of any one upon the other endangers all. * * * If the fifth and the fourteenth amendments are to be so interpreted that henceforth legislation is to be declared unconstitutional whenever it is out of accord with the economic and social theories of five members of the Supreme Court, a blow is struck at one of the most fundamental principles of our Government. The legislature then becomes not an independent and supreme body framing policies into law; it becomes subordinate to the Supreme Court, which becomes virtually a house of lords, exercising an actual veto power over such laws as fail to accord with the social theories of five of its members.

What, then, is the present problem before us? Is it one of endangering the Constitution? Or is it one of controlling the emotional slant, the intellectual background and environment of the interpreting branch of the Government? The answer is obvious. There is no objection, of course, to a constitutional amendment, but the proponents of that measure know only too well that such a step is practically impossible, and if possible, would create a delay that would tie the President's hands until we are again in another crash probably more destructive than the last. Certainly it would hold our hands until President Roosevelt is out of office.

For 13 years we have been trying to get the child-labor amendment adopted, an obviously just amendment to protect helpless childhood from the greedy hands of the exploiters, and we have not succeeded. What chance is there against the opposition of all the organized selfishness in this country, to pass through an amendment to protect the hours and working conditions of adult laborers? None at all, and the people who are proposing this method know it full well. They now shout, "Let us proceed by amendment." Before November their cry was, "Do not tinker with the Constitution." If they want to play around with this amendment, no one would object, of course, but during the 15 or 20 years intervening let us see if we cannot do something to improve the emotional make-up of the courts. Let us exercise our present constitutional power. Let us endeavor, if possible, to appoint on that body men whose background has enabled them to think in terms of the common good and general welfare; not predominantly from the vantage point of property rights.

There is no one in this House with a greater respect for our Supreme Court than I. They are all fine men, doing what they conceive to be their public duty, but, even as you and I, they are the product of their environment which, in almost every case, has been many years in the practice of the law representing property rights. When these property rights come into conflict with the rights of human beings to a living wage, or with the rights of a democracy to plan its own economy, their decisions are almost a foregone conclusion, not from any corrupt motives; quite the contrary, from the very highest motives; but their emotions, just like yours and mine, are the outgrowth of their training and experience.

This phrase, "commerce among the States", is one of a group known as the india rubber phrases, because the courts by interpretation have stretched them in about every conceivable direction. Up until 1830, under Chief Justice Marshall, these phrases, when interpreted, were so read as to enlarge the powers of the Federal Government. From that time until 1885, with few minor variations, they were interpreted so as to enlarge the powers of the States. With this newly acquired power, the States then embarked upon a rampage of trust busting and railroad rate legislation, and property rushed to the Federal Government for refuge. Then this Congress, reflecting the popular will, passed the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, and the Supreme Court, true to the emotional background and environment of its members, produced the rule of reason, which, according to Justice Day, was described as a method of judicial lawmaking, and Justice Harlan said that we must now tolerate a "reasonable violation of the law."

From 1885 on about the only judicial consistency that one can find is that the india-rubber phrases have been interpreted to enlarge Federal powers when property was trying to escape State control, and to enlarge State powers when property was trying to avoid the Federal Government.

One of these phrases, warped out of all connection with its original meaning, is "due process of law."

In Hurtado against California a man condemned to death for murder actually complained to the Supreme Court that his trial and prosecution had not been according to the conception of due process of law, as was contemplated by the constitutional fathers. The Court says: "It is too late to deny that they"—the words "due process of law"—"have been given a more extended signification."

Prof. Edwin S. Corwin says:

> The present-day meaning of this phrase is any State law which meets the approval of the Supreme Court.

The late Justice Holmes says that when the Supreme Court attempts to define "due process of law"—

> There is now hardly any limit but the sky.

The interpretation by the courts of these two phrases give us this very interesting result; the State of New York attempts to control the hours and conditions of labor. "Desist", says the Supreme Court, "you are violating the freedom of contract and depriving the employers of this valuable right without due process of law." The Federal Government, in the N. I. R. A., attempted the same thing. Again the Court says, "Desist; you are violating the sacred rights of the States to control their own industry and commerce." Thus, they tell us, the States do not have this right; yet the Federal Government must not violate it.

This Government then is called upon to function in this complex industrial world, where democracies are tottering on all sides, with a great vacuum in its sovereign powers.

Nine million of our citizens are still out of employment. Every 10 years we are experiencing recurring panics, where most of our savings are wiped out, and most of that left corraled into the hands of a few people. Our number of aged dependents is constantly on the increase and yet this Congress is told that we should spend our time for the next 15 years playing with a constitutional amendment that will certainly be opposed by 90 percent of those who are advocating this procedure.

During every period of prosperity the records of our Labor and Revenue Departments show that out of our national income the proportion going to interest, dividends, and administrative salaries has always increased at a very much greater ratio than the income going to wages. For example, from 1926 to 1929 the dividend and interest fund increased $9,000,000,000. The general wage fund increased one-half billion dollars. The wage fund went almost wholly to purchase the products of industry. A very large part of the interest and dividend fund went by investment to increase our industrial debt, and when this debt became so large that industry could no longer carry it, the crash came.

Without doubt, a very active factor in restoring our present prosperity has been the money distributed by the Government in the form of relief work. This money has gone to increase the wage fund and to maintain parity between that and the interest and dividend income, and ultimately, by taxation, will decrease the dividend fund. In a way, this accomplishes one of the basic purposes of the N. R. A., but who is there that likes the method? Yet if our courts prevent Congress from scientific, economic planning, and if we reject the President's proposal, there is no plan open to us other than to continue our efforts to spend ourselves into prosperity. Nobody likes that, but without it 9,000,000 workers face starvation; and where is there a political party that will ever have the temerity to meet that situation? Governor Landon attempted it in the beginning of his campaign, but before he got through he was outbidding President Roosevelt.

Without Government aid there is no chance of solving the problems of industry that are now confronting us. Labor alone can never solve our problems. Adequate resources and unity of leadership is lacking. Capital cannot accomplish it, because, no matter how public spirited and high minded the great majority of their leaders may be, there are always a few chiselers who, in our era of capitalism and competition, are bound to receive the reward of their own exploiting tactics. Industrialists cannot survive and compete with chiselers. What is needed is for industrial leaders to gather around the table, accept the advice of labor and the help of the Government, and agree among themselves as to proper working conditions and a wage scale that will supply a sufficient fund to keep the industrial machine in operation, providing at the same time a proper return to capital in the nature of administrative salaries, interest, and dividends, so as to reasonably reward investors and at the same time not unduly increase the industrial debt. This was the N. R. A.

The President has aptly said:

> The statute of N. I. R. A. has been outlawed; the problems have not; they are still with us.

There are other effective legislative methods of approach to this problem, but as long as the mental and emotional slant of the Supreme Court is as it is today there is no hope of success. We are not complaining today of the decision of the court in the Schechter case, but we are complaining of the mental attitude of a court which conceives all such efforts to be in violation of what they believe to be the general welfare of the United States. We need a court content to let Congress make the laws. The President's method of approach and solution is the only practical way out. Let us give it a trial, anyway, and if the people by their vote at the next election say they do not like that trial, the next Congress can very quickly change the situation, or Congress can do so without an expressed mandate from the people if they so desire.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman his 9 minutes remaining.

Mr. HARLAN. I yield, briefly.

Mr. COX. If I understood the gentleman correctly, he said, in effect, that if this course were adopted, the legislation that has been recommended passed, and if the membership of the Supreme Court should be increased to 15 that the next Congress could undo that and reduce the membership to 9.

Mr. HARLAN. I did not say that.

Mr. COX. The gentleman did not mean that, did he?

Mr. HARLAN. No; I did not say that. In the first place, there is no intention to increase the membership of the Court to 15, except as a possibility.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. HARLAN. Yes.

Mr. COX. Has the gentleman any doubt whatever in his mind but that the membership would be increased to 15?

Mr. HARLAN. I have considerable doubt; very much doubt.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARLAN. Yes; for a brief question.

Mr. KNUTSON. If I misunderstood the gentleman I would like to be corrected; but I understood the gentleman to say that if we in this Congress voted to increase the membership of the Supreme Court to 15, or to increase it, and we subsequently found that that was not the thing to do, we could change it in the next session. How are we to get rid of the Justices of the Supreme Court who are appointed in the interim?

Mr. HARLAN. That could not be done. Any judges appointed under this law in the next 2 years would, of course, be there for life, for that is provided by the Constitution.

However, with six of these judges well over 70, if Congress decides that it wants to return to a smaller Court, natural law, without doubt, will shortly remove those men who are over 70 and Congress could refuse to appoint their successors until the number of nine is again reestablished. In ordinary expectation a period of 5 or 6 years would probably suffice, just about long enough to carry out the Roosevelt program.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman, of course, has no idea but what these positions would be filled as soon as Congress grants the necessary power.

Mr. HARLAN. I have very grave doubt about that.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARLAN. I have very limited time. I do not want to be unkind, but I do not see how I can yield.

Mr. MICHENER. Just for one question?

Mr. HARLAN. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman stated that there is very grave doubt about filling the positions. I think the gentleman is probably justified in his statement because we were told last June that we needed emergency judges. We passed a bill providing for the appointment of eight. Some of them, of course, have not been appointed yet, although the positions have been available for over a year.

Mr. HARLAN. That is not a question, I would remind the gentleman from Michigan with all due respect; that is a speech.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. HARLAN. I cannot yield. I wish I could.

What administration has ever gone into power that has not packed the courts to make them contain men of their own economic slant? When President Taft was in office he jumped over two or three liberals already on the Supreme Court and picked out Justice White to become Chief Justice, because he wanted a man who would decide such a case as the Child Labor case the way he wanted it decided. [Applause.]

When Hoover came into office he attempted to appoint J. J. Parker, but his appointee was rejected by the Senate.

Why did he appoint him? Because he was the type of man that President Hoover wanted. Then he appointed Judge Roberts, one of the outstanding conservatives on the bench, because that is what he wanted. The bench at the present time is largely controlled by men expressing the economic and political desires of Presidents Harding, Hoover, and Coolidge. The two outstanding conservatives are Harding hold-overs. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, what good is there in having an election in which the people say they do not want certain economic ideas, in which they say they want the Government to have the power to plan its own economies, and then have those laws set aside by judges speaking for two Presidents that are dead and a third that is politically buried? Does anyone believe that if Landon had been elected last November he would not have packed the Court with appointees of his economic thought?

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARLAN. I cannot yield at this time. The gentleman from Georgia on the floor yesterday stated:

Why, if this occurs, all of our State rights are going to be taken away.

I would suggest that he read the case of People against Lockner, the Adkins case, and the recent Minnesota Tax case, in which, through an interpretation of the due-process-of-law provision, important rights that the States have to exercise their police and taxing powers when it comes in conflict with property have been set aside by the Supreme Court. [Applause.]

The Constitution or State rights is not in danger in this controversy. It is simply the right of an administration, just as all administrations have done in the past, to have a Supreme Court that will at least be somewhat sympathetic with the policies that administration has submitted to the people and which the people have stated they want put into effect. There is no packing of the Court here. There is nothing revolutionary about it. Why, President Grant packed the Supreme Court with two new judges.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include therein excerpts from some of these decisions which bear out the remarks which I have made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COOPER). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I suggest to the gentleman that he also call attention in his remarks to the fact that President Hoover also appointed Mr. Justice Cardozo?

Mr. HARLAN. I think that was in a moment of mental aberration. That occurred during the closing years of his term when things were slipping pretty badly. He wanted New York against Roosevelt and he wanted to appear liberal. The Court was then safely packed conservative.

Mr. MICHENER. I did not want the gentleman to forget.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I suggest to the gentleman that President Hoover appointed Cardozo after the Senate had refused to confirm a gentleman by the name of Parker of the very conservative type of Mr. Hoover, and after the unfavorable reaction to the appointment of Roberts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARLAN. My good friend and colleague [Mr. LAMNECK] yesterday in his remarks accused this body of being a rubber-stamp Congress because it followed the leadership of the Executive.

I was in this Congress when it did not follow the leadership of the Executive. It was the last 2 years of the Hoover administration, when 500 lobbies controlled our every act and thwarted every effort that President Hoover made with his feeble powers of leadership to do something to help the country. For the decade prior to that time we were not disturbed by Executive domination. The forces that then told Congress when to jump through the loop were the Anti-Saloon League, the Manufacturers' Association, the United States Chamber of Commerce, and the tariff racketeers.

Who is it that started this phrase of "rubber-stamp Congress" shortly after President Roosevelt took office? It was a motley bunch of grafting, thieving lobbies that had been accustomed to fatten themselves out of Uncle Sam's pockets, and they were very much surprised and frightened when an Executive stepped into power who told them that he was going to take a hand in the Government for a while.

My friend from Ohio has been almost consistently against the program that the President has put through Congress to thwart these interests. He vigorously opposed the reciprocity agreement, and his letter on that subject, wherein he attempted to organize a bloc to tie the President's hands, has frequently been read into the RECORD by the enemies of the administration from the left side of this Hall.

He is absolutely sincere and honest in his efforts and believes the things he is doing are right, just as the conservative judges on the Supreme Court. But when it comes to following leadership, as for me, I would much prefer to follow the leadership of the elected President of the United States, whose constitutional duty it is to advise Congress, than to jump at the behest of the Manufacturers' Association and the tariff grabbers.

Many of the Members of this House who profess to have an undying adoration of our Federal courts supported the Retirement Act yesterday, and contended that that would relieve the pressure for the President's proposal. I cannot conceive it to be possible for any intelligent human being, and especially a lawyer, to express unintentionally that much contempt for the membership of the Federal bench. Those men who are wrecking the program of Congress believe that they are performing a duty for the salvation of their country. They are speaking out of their emotional slant, their educational background, and their environment. Now we say to those men, "You just desist from your crusade of righteousness; Congress is not satisfied with what you have been doing. Just step out of the picture and take your salary and run along."

What would any Member of this body think if some force outside of Congress, dissatisfied with his legislative record, would come to him with the proposition, "Well, now, you just resign from Congress and cut out making yourself objectionable, and we will pay you your salary from here out." There are none of us venal enough to be affected by such a proposition, and it is my prophecy that none of the judges who now conceived themselves to be holding the New Deal in check will do anything else than continue on their jobs until they are called by the Angel Gabriel. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a special order heretofore entered, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] was to be recognized for 25 minutes, but he has informed the Chair he does not now desire to occupy that time.

Under a further special order previously entered the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, perhaps in beginning my maiden speech in this House we should come to a distinct understanding that limited time is precious time, and therefore I do not care to be interrupted during my remarks, and will not yield.

Kipling in his Law of the Jungle gave this excellent advice to the wolf cub:

When Pack meets Pack in the Jungle
And neither will go from the trail,
Lie down till the leaders have spoken—
It may be fair words shall prevail.

As a new Member of Congress I have tried to keep that advice in mind because I felt it was applicable to me, a cub lost amid the trails, the bypaths, and the rules of this congressional jungle.

Our leaders on both sides of the aisle have spoken. The gage of battle has been thrown down. Fair words are not going to prevail, and therefore each cub in this jungle should be prepared to support his leaders with every ounce of power and skill he may possess.

I had intended, and had prepared to speak on the subject Economic Royalists Versus Labor Royalists. I had prepared to show that labor royalists today are much more inimical and dangerous to the interest and welfare of organized labor itself, as well as the general welfare of the people, than economic royalists. I had intended to show that John L. Lewis is the greatest labor royalist in the country today, which, in the words of the street, means labor racketeer, and that as such he is much more dangerous and inimical to the interest of labor than all the economic royalists put together, on the basis that enemies within are more dangerous than enemies without.

I had intended to point out that the historic statement, "United we stand, divided we fall", is peculiarly applicable to labor in this day and age.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman mean to say that John L. Lewis is a racketeer?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COOPER). The gentleman from Illinois announced at the beginning of his remarks that he would decline to yield and the Chair hopes that all Members will bear in mind the gentleman's request.

Mr. MASON. Any man who will divide the ranks of labor into two hostile camps is not a friend of labor and is not the kind of leader that labor should follow in this day and age. However, Mr. Speaker, when the President's message on the reorganization of the courts came before us like a bolt out of a clear sky, I pushed aside my labor speech and I decided to speak upon the subject, America at the Crossroads, or, if you prefer, Congress on the Spot.

The President's message has thrown into the lap of Congress the greatest, the most fundamental question that Congress has had to face since the Civil War. His message places before Congress a choice between two paths. Shall we follow the path that was blazed by our ancestors, the path that we have followed for 150 years, the path that has led forward to a greater progress and a higher standard of living for the American people than any other nation enjoys, the path that has insured freedom of speech, freedom of the press, freedom of religion, and has given greater opportunities to our people than any other nation has offered; and I can safely say that without these opportunities the great majority of the Members here would not be here.

The other alternative being, shall we turn directly to the left, shall we follow the path that the Italians and the Germans are following today in their countries, shall we follow the path that means centralized government in the hands of one man with a subservient legislative body and a subservient judicial body? This is the path that is the alternative. Ultimately, this path must in the process of time, rob us of all the liberties that we as Americans enjoy and cherish so much.

This is the decision that is before the Congress as a result of this message. No wonder I say, "America at the crossroads—Congress on the spot."

If we pass this tailor-made bill that accompanied the President's message, we will be doing two things:

First, we will be announcing to the world that the Congress of the United States continues to be subservient to and controlled by the Executive, and, second, we will be forcing the Supreme Court to bow its neck to the yoke of the Executive.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in the debates I have listened to since coming to this Congress I have noticed two schools of thought concerning the Constitution and what should be done about it that have been coming constantly into head-on collision. These schools of thought do not differ much, if any, as to what needs to be done, but they differ definitely as to how to go about it.

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MASON. The one school of thought, led by the President, considers our Constitution has become a strait jacket that prevents the Government from doing what is necessary to be done in this day and age, a strait jacket that will not allow the Congress or the Executive to pass legislation and put it into effect to take care properly of the complicated industrial situation of the society that we live in, and this school of thought proposes the following plan for amending or enlarging or expanding the Constitution to meet the present-day needs. This is the plan:

First, the President shall recommend to the Congress necessary legislation regardless of whether it conforms to the plain provisions of the Constitution, if, in his judgment, it is within the spirit of the Constitution.

Second, the Congress shall, when it receives such legislation and such recommendation from the President, hold in abeyance its own judgment in the matter, shall ignore the plain provisions of the Constitution, shall accept the judgment of the President as to the spirit of the Constitution, and then shall pass the legislation.

Third, the Supreme Court, in its turn, shall ignore the plain provisions of the Constitution; shall look to and be guided by the general welfare of the people; shall even take into consideration the vote that was cast at the last general election; and then, in view of those things, shall place its stamp of approval upon the legislation, regardless of the constitutional questions that may arise because, in the opinion of one man, it comes within the spirit of the Constitution.

This, stripped of all the wonderful phraseology, is the plan that confronts us today.

The other school of thought contends that the Constitution is the supreme law of the land; that it is, if you please, a set of bylaws adopted by the people, after due deliberation and debate, that shall direct, shall guide, shall control, yes, and shall limit, the actions of each of the three branches of the Government.

This school of thought contends that whenever the Executive or the Congress shall decide that the Constitution is not flexible enough to meet present-day needs, then it is the duty of the Congress to submit a resolution to amend to the people for their consideration and their action.

This school of thought insists that the power to amend the Constitution is inherent in the people and cannot be exercised by any branch of the Government.

This position was wonderfully well set forth a week or so ago by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX], who in a magnificent and scholarly address pointed out clearly, to my mind, how absurd it would be for Congress or for the Executive or for the Supreme Court, or for all three put together, for that matter, to amend the Constitution by evasion or subterfuge. That would mean assuming powers they do not possess. It would mean setting themselves up above and supreme to both the Constitution and the people.

This position was admirably well expressed again yesterday by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAMNECK] in an extended address both scholarly and masterful.

Our President is a popular leader. Our President is a colorful leader. Our President is a dynamic leader. [Applause.] Our President is a great leader. [Applause.] And as such he is entitled to the loyal support and the intelligent cooperation—with the accent on intelligent—of the Members of the majority party in Congress.

As such he is also entitled to the intelligent cooperation—with the accent still on intelligent—and to the friendly criticism of the minority Members of Congress.

Personally, I stand ready to the best of my ability to give the President that kind of cooperation and that kind of criticism.

But I am not ready to say—paraphrasing Stephen Decatur—I am not ready to say, "My President, may he always be right; but right or wrong, my President."

I consider that statement epitomizes the attitude of some Members of Congress.

I want, in the face of this tremendous decision that we must make, to remind you of the words of Thomas Paine, uttered 150 years ago, during the first great national crisis, a crisis that made necessary the Constitutional Convention, which after much labor and travail produced the greatest charter of human liberty this world has ever known, our Federal Constitution. Listen to the words of Paine:

> These are times that try men's souls. The summer soldier and the sunshine patriot will in this crisis shrink from his duty, but he that stands it now deserves the love and praise of men and women.

Pray God, that the majority on both sides of this aisle shall not be summer soldiers or sunshine patriots when the time comes to make our decision.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion I wish to leave with the Members of Congress this word picture. It is a picture of Andy Jackson, one of the greatest Democrats that ever lived—a real American; a southern gentleman; a man's man if there ever was one. In some respects, in many respects, the occupant of the White House today is like unto Andy Jackson. In one respect he is altogether different from Andy Jackson. The scene is a banquet hall, a banquet that has been prepared by Jackson's friends, his neighbors, and his political associates. Many toasts have been proposed and drunk, all leading in one direction. The psychological moment has arrived. Jackson is invited to propose a toast. Jackson stands. Stretching that tall, gaunt, fever-wracked form to its fullest height, he pauses. In front of him are the friends of his lifetime, his neighbors, the men whose political principles have always been his. The men in front of him have their heartstrings wrapped around the same things that his heartstrings are wrapped around, and Jackson holds up his glass and says:

Gentlemen, our Federal Union; it must be preserved.

Mr. Speaker, from the letters coming to Members of Congress, and telegrams from all over this great land of ours today—north and south, east and west—I am convinced that from pulpit, from banquet halls, from legislative halls, from the streets, figuratively speaking, the patriots of this Nation of both parties are proposing and drinking to the great toast "Our Federal Constitution; it must be preserved." [Applause.] That is our task.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. I yield for a question.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Will the gentleman kindly inform Members of the House what constitutional provision would be violated were the Members of the Congress to increase the number of Justices on the Supreme Court?

Mr. MASON. I shall answer that in this way, that no constitutional provision will be violated by this Congress acting upon the proposal that the President has placed before us, but it is not a constitutional question involved there. It is the question of the supremacy, it is the question of the independence, it is the question of our whole form of government being at stake. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

EXCISE TAX ON CARRIERS

Mr. DOUGHTON, from the Committee on Ways and Means, presented a privileged report on House Joint Resolution 212, to amend an act entitled "An act to levy an excise tax upon carriers and an income tax upon their employees, and for other purposes", approved August 29, 1935, which was referred to the Union Calendar and ordered printed.

RESOLUTION OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY, CONNECTICUT

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 7 minutes and to read into the RECORD a message from the General Assembly of the State of Connecticut.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to proceed for 7 minutes, and to read a message from the General Assembly of the State of Connecticut. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House of Representatives, I received the following letter today with the attached communication from the Secretary of State of the State of Connecticut, together with the enclosures, which read as follows:

STATE OF CONNECTICUT,
SECRETARY'S OFFICE,
Hartford, February 10, 1937.

Hon. ALFRED N. PHILLIPS, Jr., M. C.,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Pursuant to House Resolution No. 30, I am enclosing herewith certified copy of same.

Copies of House Journal for February 9 have been forwarded for your convenience.

Very truly yours,

C. JOHN SATTI, Secretary.
By J. WALTER DARLEY,
Deputy Secretary.

Resolution concerning the proposed change in the Supreme Court

Resolved by this house, That we urge the Senators and Representatives of Connecticut, the Constitution State, in the Congress of the United States to oppose the astounding proposal of the President of the United States with regard to the United States Supreme Court. The adoption of the President's plan would make the Court subservient to the will of the Executive.

The life of the Federal Government is threatened by anything which tends to break down the independence of any of the three great departments—executive, legislative, and judicial.

The Declaration of Independence itself puts forth as a prominent grievance justifying the Revolution the subservience of judges to the British Crown.

An independent judiciary is the sole protector of the people against illegal or unconstitutional acts. Whatever attacks that strikes against the very citadel of popular liberty and the temple of private justice.

We look to our Senators and Representatives in Congress to keep faith and to "preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States"; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state is directed to immediately send a certified copy of this resolution to each Senator and Representative in the Congress of the United States from Connecticut.

Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen, regarding the vote of the Connecticut House of Representatives against the President's court reorganization proposal (Feb. 9, 1937), the vote was, with three exceptions, on a strictly partisan basis.

I wish to point out that under our "rotten borough system" of apportionment in the Connecticut House of Representatives 167 Republican representatives represent 368,833 citizens, whereas the Democratic minority of 100 representatives represent 1,212,265 citizens. In this connection allow me to present a few interesting and, in my humble opinion, odious comparisons. The city of Hartford, with a population of 164,072, has two representatives in the lower house, whereas the town of Hartland, with a population of 296, also has two representatives. I wish further to point out that the Hartland representatives are as influential and have equal privileges with the Hartford representatives. If we add the two members representing the town of Granby, which has a population of 1,388, these two delegations can outvote populous Hartford by a ratio of 2 to 1. Let us go down through the other counties—seven—in the State. New Haven, with a population of 162,655, has two representatives, as has Guilford, with 3,117 inhabitants. These two towns are in New Haven County. In New London County the city of New London, with a population of 29,640, has the same representation in the lower house as the town of Lyme, with 546 people. In Fairfield, my own county, and congressional district, Bridgeport, with a population of 146,716, and Stamford, my native town, with a population of 56,765, have two representatives each, whereas the beautiful but comparatively small towns of Redding, with 1,599 inhabitants, and Newtown, with 2,635, also have two representatives each. In Windham County the town of Windham has a population of 13,773 and two representatives. Little Canterbury, in the same county, with a population of 942, also has two representatives. In Litchfield County, Torrington, with 26,040 inhabitants, and Colebrook, with 564 people, and Goshen, with 683 people, all three have two representatives each. In Middlesex County, the county seat of Middletown has a population of 24,554 and two representatives, whereas the near-by small community of Killingworth, with a population of 482 souls, also has two representatives. Vernon, in Tolland County, has 8,703 people and two representatives; while Union, the smallest town in Connecticut, numbering within its borders 196 souls, also has two representatives. In every instance legislators representing the larger communities are Democrats and those representing the smaller communities are Republicans.

Listed statistically, the table is as follows:

County	Representation, lower house
	Republicans		Democrats
	Legislators	Population	Legislators	Population
Hartford	20	71,325	27	349,775
New Haven	22	66,286	19	371,355
New London	21	42,859	10	76,107
Fairfield	26	101,525	11	285,177
Windham	12	12,391	12	41,695
Litchfield	38	49,893	5	32,603
Middlesex	14	14,641	8	36,747
Tolland	14	9,913	8	18,746
Total	167	368,833	100	1,212,265

It is quite apparent from the foregoing that while the President's recommendations to improve the efficiency of all the Federal courts failed to win the approval of the majority of representatives in the lower Connecticut House, those voting in favor of our President's recommendations represent over 1,200,000 of the people of my State, whereas the partisan opposition represents less than 400,000 of my fellow citizens. [Applause.]

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILLIPS. Yes.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Does the gentleman from Connecticut have the vote of the Senate of the State of Connecticut on that proposition?

Mr. PHILLIPS. No; I have not.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. I am wondering by what reason the lower branch of the Connecticut Legislature sent the vote, but did not send any reflection of the attitude of the other body, which is a Democratic body.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, answering the question, I assume from my study of this matter at long range that it is purely a partisan action on the part of the Republican Assembly of the State of Connecticut, directed against the proposals of the President of the United States. The gentleman from Connecticut very well points out that the senate in Connecticut is a Democratic body, by political control, and we have heard nothing from the Senate of the State of Connecticut in opposition to the plan of the President of the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

THE RECORD

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, the remarks made by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. PHILLIPS] cause me to make these few remarks:

There has grown up a custom in this House of filling the RECORD with resolutions and memorials adopted by State legislatures. There is a definite method, under the rules, by which they can be inserted or recorded in the RECORD, by merely filing them with an attached slip and not having them printed in full.

During the last Congress the legislature of one State in particular seemed to pass a few every day. How that legislature ever attended to the business of its own State was of some concern to some of us. Of course, we like to hear from these State legislatures. We like to have them take an interest in national affairs. Some of us have been members of those august bodies. We like to have the members come down and see how we operate once in a while. But if there is to grow up a practice of inserting at length or reading from the floor ideas and conceptions at long range, without having the problem before them that these legislatures have in mind, perhaps we will be doing nothing, like some of them appear to be doing. Surely in these times the State legislatures have plenty to do in taking care of their own people and their own problems. [Applause.] A part of our problem has been because they either have not taken care of their own people or were unable to do so, and they have been knocking at our doors for years to take care of the people back in their own States, interfere with their State prerogatives, and then in the next breath we get from them an elaborate, gold-sealed memorial as to what we should do here. We will hear more of these.

I read in the newspapers of other States which are going to decide this problem which is before us and which is not yet conceived. On whichever side of this great question which we have not yet gone into, these legislatures shall stand, may be interesting reading back home in their own Commonwealths, but I submit to them that some people here, eliminating myself, may feel fairly competent to handle this great problem and to arrive at some conclusion, perhaps not on one side or the other side, as it is being discussed today. Perhaps some compromise may be worked out. In the interim, I respectfully suggest to the great legislatures of the 48 States—we may hear from the Territories later—that if they want to mail a memorial to us it will be heartily received, and if some stalwart representative from that State desires to drop it in the hopper, he may do so; but if I am on the floor I am going to be bold enough from now on to object to the insertion in full or reading from the floor of any gratuitous memorial from any one of the great 48 States of the Union. [Applause.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield.

Mr. RICH. I was going to ask the gentleman, since he has served in a legislature, what improvement Congress is over the various State legislatures?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Why, this is the greatest deliberative body in the world [applause and laughter], accent on the "deliberative" part, and I hope we have deliberation on some of the questions which are before us now. [Applause.]

Mr. RICH. I hope so, too.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Montana rise?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. In a way, Mr. Speaker, it is a question of personal privilege on account of some remarks made by the gentleman yesterday morning concerning new Members of the House, but I wish to ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may we have an understanding about this. There is one Member on the Republican side who would like to have 5 minutes after the gentleman from Montana concludes. If we are not going to transact any business, I will not object, but otherwise I would like our Republican friend to have the same chance, too.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I will not object.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there is a special order here. As far as I am personally concerned, I do not care, but it involves the convenience of Members who relied upon action under the special order at this time. For that reason, I hope the gentleman will defer his request until the special orders are out of the way, and then I certainly will not object.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the request at the present time.

GUARANTY OF DEBENTURES ISSUED BY FEDERAL HOUSING ADMINISTRATION

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 113, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 113

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of House Joint Resolution 127, a joint resolution to extend for a period of 2 years the guaranty by the United States of debentures issued by the Federal Housing Administration. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the joint resolution and shall continue not to exceed one-half hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the joint resolution shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the joint resolution for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the joint resolution and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, this is a resolution from the Committee on Rules, providing for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 127, to extend for the period of 2 years the guaranty by the United States of the debentures outstanding by the Federal Housing Administration.

Under the Federal Housing Act the guaranty of these debentures would expire the 1st of next July. The Department is of the opinion that it has not been in operation long enough to fulfill all of the demands and necessities of the Federal Housing Act, and it should be extended for 2 years in order to promote the activities of the Federal Housing Administration and carry it on with the full guaranty of these debentures in order to still further extend the program and to take care of the loans that have already been made. As far as I know, there is no objection whatever on the part of anyone to the extension of this guaranty under this resolution. The Department desires it. The Senate has already passed it. It has been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency, as I understand, unanimously.

We are asking unanimous consent to substitute the Senate resolution for the House resolution, because there is a difference of date, the House resolution having said June 30, whereas the Senate resolution makes it July 1, which they have concluded is the correct date.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to amend the rule by striking out, in line 4, "H. J. Res. 127" and inserting in lieu thereof "S. J. Res. 38", substituting the Senate resolution for the House resolution.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object; as I understand, there is no material difference between these resolutions.

Mr. GREENWOOD. There is no difference whatever except the matter of the date, and the committee concluded that the Senate resolution making the date July 1 provided the correct date to have in the resolution.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 38, to extend for a period of 2 years the guaranty by the United States of debentures issued by the Federal Housing Administrator.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 38, to extend for a period of 2 years the guaranty by the United States of debentures issued by the Federal Housing Administrator, with Mr. LEWIS of Colorado in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the joint resolution was dispensed with.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, this is a resolution that extends for 2 years the time within which the Housing Administration may insure debentures that are exchanged for insured mortgages that are foreclosed.

Mr. Chairman, the purpose of taking care of these foreclosures by the substitution of debentures for cash is to economize in the matter of the actual money required in these transactions. The Mutual Insurance Corporation fund was only $10,000,000 as originally provided, although it now has grown to $15,000,000.

Only 12 properties have been taken over and, of these, 3 have been finally disposed of. Taking the three transactions as a whole there has been no substantial loss. Operations have extended over a period of nearly 2 years. It is desired that this extension be granted now. Authority exists for insuring these debentures on any mortgages that are insured prior to the 1st day of July 1937; but contracts for construction are constantly being made and negotiated, and unless this authority is extended there will be interference with business now under negotiation and curtailment of activities that have been under way.

This resolution comes before the House with the unanimous report of the Committee on Banking and Currency. It simply renews and extends legislation which the Congress has formally passed and which has been in operation very satisfactorily for nearly 2 years.

Mr. Chairman, I feel that I should not take the time of the House in any extended discussion of the resolution.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STEAGALL. Certainly.

Mr. TABER. As I understand it, the procedure through which these debentures are issued is something like this—and if I am wrong I wish to be corrected: If a default is made by the mortgagor and foreclosure has to be made, the Federal Housing Administration takes over the property and issues debentures.

Mr. STEAGALL. That is right; debentures that are guaranteed by the Government.

Mr. TABER. Guaranteed to the mortgagee.

Mr. STEAGALL. That is right.

Mr. TABER. And these debentures are a liability of the Government.

Mr. STEAGALL. That is right; they are guaranteed by the Government. The fund now amounts to $15,000,000, but in case the fund should be exhausted these debentures stand guaranteed by the Treasury of the United States for the time indicated in the resolution.

Mr. TABER. And any of them that are issued in exchange for mortgages insured prior to June 30, 1939, would be fully guaranteed as to principal and interest by the United States.

Mr. STEAGALL. That is the debentures?

Mr. TABER. Yes; any of those debentures.

Mr. STEAGALL. That is right.

Mr. TABER. Is there a recovery to the Federal Government out of this?

Mr. STEAGALL. Oh, absolutely. Down to this time the original fund of $10,000,000 which was supplied to the Mutual Mortgage Corporation has been increased to $15,000,000. Only 12 properties have been taken over and there have been but three completed foreclosures. Taking these three foreclosures together there is no substantial loss.

Only $37,000 of debentures are now outstanding after operating nearly 2 years. In this connection I may say that $637,000,000 has been insured under this title.

Mr. TABER. Guaranteed?

Mr. STEAGALL. Insured under this title—insured or approved under applications pending.

Mr. TABER. What I was trying to get at particularly is this: Are these items cleaned up, as a general rule, when these debentures are issued—that is, is the liability of the fund or the Government finally determined when these debentures are issued, or is it still contingent upon recovery—that is, is there a sale of the property under foreclosure, and following that a definite loss established which the mortgagee sustains?

Mr. STEAGALL. Absolutely.

Mr. TABER. And the amount of the loss is covered by debentures guaranteed by the Government?

Mr. STEAGALL. The mortgagee proceeds in the regular way, forecloses the mortgage and ascertains all that is due under it; and then the fund takes care of the entire obligation to the mortgagee and takes over the property. They have taken over three properties, down to this time, as I have indicated, with the results stated.

Mr. TABER. My reaction to it is whether it would not be better policy to pay out of this $15,000,000 the established losses instead of issuing debentures.

Mr. STEAGALL. Probably, as operations have been conducted, and from the results that have been attained down to this time, that might be true; but, of course, we are undertaking to anticipate possibilities. In view of the fact the fund is very small it was regarded as better to take care of any debentures by a Government guaranty, which makes it the same as cash and prevents any possible exhaustion of the fund. These debentures are only outstanding for 3 years.

Mr. TABER. I understand that; but that does make it an exceedingly involved system of accounting, and does it not create a situation in which it is exceedingly difficult to determine the fiscal position of the Government?

Mr. STEAGALL. No.

Mr. TABER. Would it not be better for these people to come to Congress and receive the funds that are required to meet these losses rather than go about it in the way sought here?

Mr. STEAGALL. There is no difficulty in keeping the accounts in these transactions; the record shows this to be true. The reason for the substitution of debentures for cash is because the established fund was only $10,000,000, and no one could tell how much cash would be required. Naturally it was the desire to use as little as possible. The results down to this time show the cash supply has been more than sufficient to take care of any purchases under mortgages foreclosed; but for the time being and until we see how it works out further, we think it is better to use debentures, and as this fund increases if our experience is the same, unquestionably it will only be a short time until the debentures may be abandoned and cash used to take care of foreclosures.

Mr. TABER. How long has this been running?

Mr. STEAGALL. About a year and a half or nearly 2 years. I cannot give exact dates.

Mr. TABER. With that experience and with only 37,000 of these outstanding it would seem to me that experience has already established it would be better tactics to go ahead and pay cash and have the obligations written off.

Mr. STEAGALL. As soon as it develops that this experience is an adequate safeguard for the future, undoubtedly the plan which the gentleman has in mind will be adopted.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. I am receiving many letters in reference to title I of the Housing Act. Does the passage of this bill mean title I will not be extended?

Mr. STEAGALL. May I say title I is not involved in this proposition. This relates to the extension of time in which the Government may guarantee debentures that are exchanged for property foreclosed under insured mortgages.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will another bill be presented which will give us an opportunity to consider the other matters, including title I.

Mr. STEAGALL. I think I can assure the gentleman that legislation will be brought in at not too distant a day that will open up the questions which the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. COCHRAN. With that explanation I am satisfied. I hope, however, that the legislation will soon be considered.

Mr. BIERMANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. BIERMANN. Did I understand the gentleman to say that when a property is foreclosed, the F. H. A. issues debentures to cover the entire amount of the mortgage?

Mr. STEAGALL. This is the mutual insurance fund. They issue debentures which discharge the obligation on the mortgage in full to the mortgagee. The property is taken over, and then, of course, is disposed of in the best possible way.

Mr. BIERMANN. The F. H. A. insures only to the extent of 20 percent?

Mr. STEAGALL. It insures to the extent of 80 percent of the value of the property.

Mr. BIERMANN. That is news to me. I thought the F. H. A. insured to only 20 percent of the value.

Mr. STEAGALL. That is under title I. This is title II.

Mr. BIERMANN. If the F. H. A. insures to the extent of 80 percent of the value, what becomes of the other 20 percent?

Mr. STEAGALL. The mortgagor is supposed to have some equity and some margin of value to begin with.

Mr. BIERMANN. When the property is disposed of, how are the proceeds divided?

Mr. STEAGALL. The proceeds are turned over to the mortgagee and whatever is left goes back to the mortgagor for his equity.

Mr. BIERMANN. The mortgagee is reimbursed up to the extent of 80 percent?

Mr. STEAGALL. The mortgagee gets all his money; that is what his mortgage calls for. He is reimbursed by delivery of the debentures.

Mr. BIERMANN. Suppose the mortgaged property brought only 70 percent of the amount of the mortgage; then the mortgagee would get that 70 percent and 10 percent more?

Mr. STEAGALL. That is all he can get.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman from Iowa is evidently confused about the 80 percent. That 80 percent is 80 percent of the value of the property on which the mortgage is issued, not the mortgage. The mortgage itself is insured in full. Is that clear?

Mr. BIERMANN. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The 80 percent refers to 80 percent of the appraised value of the property on which the mortgage is given.

Mr. BIERMANN. If a bank issued a mortgage to the extent of 85 percent of the value of the mortgaged property, then the additional 5 percent is not included?

Mr. WILLIAMS. It would not be eligible for insurance.

Mr. BIERMANN. They could not insure that at all?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; they are limited to 80 percent of the value of the property on which the mortgage is given.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. May I say to the gentleman from Alabama that there is a great deal of interest in my State in behalf of the extension of title I. I have received a good many letters about it and I have been informed by two or three Members from other States during the last few minutes that the same interest is manifested in their States favoring the extension of title I.

Mr. STEAGALL. Of course, this legislation relates only to title II, but as I stated to the gentleman from Missouri, I am confident there is going to be further housing legislation dealing with the matter in a broad way before the session ends.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. As I understand it, the main reason for the success of this legislation has been the fact that the banks are insured a rediscounting agency in case during the long life of the loan they get in a position where they have to cash in the loan. This keeps them in a liquid condition, and what I want to know is this: When the time expires on the issuance of these debentures and, for instance, if Congress were to refuse to extend this power and they should dip into their cash reserve and exhaust it, is that the extent of the liability of the Federal Government on the guaranteeing of these loans?

Mr. STEAGALL. As to the guaranteeing of debentures, that would be the limit.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WHITE], and ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio may be allowed to proceed for the 5 minutes out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate this opportunity to proceed out of order for a few minutes for the purpose of paying a brief tribute to the memory of Thomas A. Edison.

About 15 or 20 minutes before I came over I received a telegram, which might be classified as a memorial from another legislature, but hardly of the same kind as referred to a few moments ago by the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR]. This was an advice to the effect that the Ohio Legislature had taken action designating February 11 as National Inventors' Day in the Buckeye State. They have chosen February 11 because this is the anniversary of the birth of probably the greatest inventor of all times—Thomas A Edison.

I must at this point express acknowledgment of the activity and interest in work along this line by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH] and my colleague the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FLETCHER].

During the Revolutionary War the British General Tryon and the traitor Benedict Arnold conducted a series of raids in the State of Connecticut and set fire to many colonial homes. As a result of the fire losses, and to indemnify the property owners, the Continental Congress awarded a half million acres of land in the Ohio western reserve, which became known as the "fire sufferers' land." These half million acres comprise what is today the counties of Huron and Erie and one or two other townships in the northern part of the State. In this community, with this typical American background, is the little town of Milan, Ohio, just 4 miles from my home. Many of you possibly have driven through this town. If you have, it would probably be difficult for you to realize today, as you gaze upon this peaceful, beautiful little village of 695 inhabitants, that it was once the second largest grain-shipping center in the world, second only to Odessa, Russia. In this village there was born just 90 years ago this great American figure, Thomas A. Edison.

It seems to me very appropriate that in view of the action taken by the Ohio Legislature in making this birthday of Thomas A. Edison National Inventors' Day in that State and in view of the services rendered by this great American citizen to the progress and advancement of civilization, not only in America but throughout the world, that some remarks be made on the floor of the House in recognition of the day.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. A similar step is being taken in the Senate today by Senator ROBERT J. BULKLEY. I think most of us are familiar with the work accomplished by Edison, but it was rather interesting to me, as familiar as I thought I was with it, living just 3 or 4 miles from the place of his birth, to note some of the things had escaped my mind.

In glancing over this list I would like to mention quickly a few of them.

Edison invented the typewriter which is today known as the Remington. He invented the quadruple telegraph repeater for simultaneously dispatching several messages over a single wire. He invented the device which became known as the mimeograph. He invented the talking machine, the electric dynamo, the ore separator, the electric locomotive, the railway signal system, the process for making plate glass, the camera which makes possible motion pictures, the process for constructing concrete buildings, and the underlying devices necessary for radio, television, sound pictures, and the X-ray. Probably his greatest service to mankind was his invention of the electric light.

When we examine this list of the inventions of Thomas A. Edison we see that they march hand in hand with the development and progress of our own country and, in fact, the advancement of civilization during the last half century.

On the morning following his death the New York Times, in its striking editorial entitled "Prospero Is Dead", echoed a sentiment of countless Americans in the following words:

> The Eskimo on Bering Strait, the Kirghiz of the steppes, East Indians in remote villages, Moors of the town, and Bedouins of the desert—east, west, north, south—all the tribes of men owe a harmless pleasure, a quickening of the imaginative pulse, to this incomparable magician. He is the god of safety to seamen and riders of the air. He is the universal lamplighter. Multitudinous homes and buildings and streets shine every night in his praise. • • • How many men and women he has set to work in the industries sprung from his brain is beyond estimation. Between the time of our grandfathers and our own he has transformed the world. He has added immeasurably to the comfort, enjoyment, and productivity of mankind.

Mr. FOCHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. I will yield.

Mr. FOCHT. With the permission of the gentleman, I would like to state in connection with this tribute to Thomas A. Edison that the first application made for driving a street car was made by Thomas A. Edison in the city of Sunbury, Pa., and the citizens of that town are raising a fund to erect a museum to contain a number of relics that it has acquired.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. I thank the gentleman, and I think that is a proper thing to do.

This, gentlemen, is my tribute in behalf of the State of Ohio to Thomas A. Edison on the ninetieth anniversary of his birth. [Applause.]

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask that all debate on this resolution be now closed and the bill be read for amendment.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 204 (b) of the National Housing Act, as amended, is amended by striking out "July 1, 1937", and inserting in lieu thereof "July 1, 1939."

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I rise to ask the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency a question. This bill does not cover the same matter as title I.

Mr. STEAGALL. No.

Mr. BIERMANN. We have received a good deal of correspondence about title I, and that is an entirely different thing.

Mr. STEAGALL. Absolutely. The bill covers insurance of mortgages.

Mr. BIERMANN. Does this cover the case where a man borrows money to build a house?

Mr. STEAGALL. It provides only for the guaranty of debentures issued to mortgagees in case of foreclosures. If a foreclosure takes place, debentures pay the mortgagee, and they are guaranteed by the Government.

Mr. BIERMANN. Under title I the line of credit is insured to the extent of 20 percent. I would like to ask the gentleman what is the difference between title I and this bill?

Mr. STEAGALL. This bill does not cover any of the provisions of title I. It only deals with the manner by which the insurance fund meets its obligations to the mortgagee. If the mortgage is insured and foreclosed, it is taken care of by debentures guaranteed by the Government.

Mr. REILLY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield.

Mr. REILLY. Title I pertains to the repairing and remodeling of houses, where the Government guarantees 20 percent, and which was afterward cut down to 10 percent. This bill covers nothing but insurance of mortgages.

Mr. BIERMANN. By what organization?

Mr. REILLY. In 9,000 organizations—some building and loan people and some banks and insurance companies. They have 150,000 mortgage loans insured.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. We have assurance from the committee that a bill later will be put before Congress extending title I.

Mr. REILLY. If any Member wants to bring that matter up he can introduce a bill for the extension of title I.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Is there now any prospective legislation pertaining to that subject?

Mr. REILLY. Not that I know of.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. For the gentleman's information, the authorities of the Housing Commission have told our committee several times that in their judgment the purposes of title I have been fully accomplished.

Mr. BIERMANN. In other words, we are not likely to get any legislation extending title I?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Not as far as I am concerned.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired. Under the rule, the Committee will rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. COOPER] having resumed the chair, Mr. LEWIS of Colorado, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration Senate Joint Resolution 38, and, under the rule, he reported the joint resolution back to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered. The question is on the third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

A similar House joint resolution was laid on the table.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 1439. An act to provide for loans made necessary by floods or other catastrophes in the year 1937.

BOARD OF EDUCATION, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I desire officially to place some most vital information before this House of Representatives, and I respectfully request that I am not interrupted until I have finished. I will finish within my allotted time.

During the sessions of the Seventy-fourth Congress I, as a Member of Congress, made serious charges against the Board of Education of the District of Columbia.

I charged the Board of Education of the District of Columbia with not handling the funds which the Congress appropriated for educational purposes in the Nation's Capital in an efficient manner. I produced written proof of my charges, which the Board of Education has not been able to answer. I proved that the Board of Education ordered the destruction of the Tenley School on Wisconsin Avenue, in Washington, D. C., and refused to lease or sell it to St. Ann's Roman Catholic Parish, notwithstanding it had been abandoned by the Board of Education.

The Board of Education lobbied against the bills which were introduced in the House and Senate and attempted to get the President of the United States to refuse to sign the bill authorizing the selling of this abandoned school building to St. Ann's Roman Catholic Parish in Washington, D. C.

The bill was signed and the District of Columbia taxpayers and the Government were saved many thousands of dollars annually, in spite of the lobbying activities of the Board of Education.

I charge the Board of Education with permitting the use of books which directly and indirectly advocated communism. The Board of Education first denied this, and then later removed these books. This proves their incompetence.

I charged the Board of Education with permitting the circulation among teachers and pupils of a magazine containing the advertisement of a vile, filthy, lascivious storybook, totally unfit for young schoolboys and young schoolgirls. The Board of Education first denied this, but later on, under another pretext, removed this magazine, carrying the advertisement of this book, from circulation among the teachers and students. This proves the careless indifference of the Board of Education.

I testified before meetings of a subcommittee of this House of Representatives that I would vote for the repeal of the "red rider" when and if this situation was satisfactorily explained by the Board of Education.

The Board of Education of the District of Columbia, notwithstanding the action of the House of Representatives, which recently adopted the McCormack amendment, are directly and indirectly propagandizing on a national scale to have legislation passed which would permit the advocacy of communism to pupils in the schoolrooms of the public schools in the District of Columbia, in the Nation's Capital.

I ask the Members of this House of Representatives to arouse yourselves to a full realization of what is happening. This affects your congressional districts.

Do not be deceived by the statements of the Board of Education that the McCormack amendment is an insult to the rank-and-file teachers.

The Board of Education of the District of Columbia have not been outstanding in their fight to get better working conditions and better wages for the rank-and-file teachers of the District of Columbia; instead, the Board of Education hired, at $50 a day, a professor, identified with the University of Moscow, Russia, to teach "character education" to our teachers and children.

It seems strange that the Board of Education has to get a professor identified with the University of Moscow in Russia to teach character to our school children. What is wrong with our own professors and teachers?

Washington is the hotbed of international propagandists. Foreign propaganda and influence of a communistic character has already removed the flagpoles and the American flags from the tops of our Federal buildings along Pennsylvania Avenue in our Nation's Capital.

If the Congress permits the Board of Education of the District of Columbia to legalize the advocacy of communism in public schools in the Nation's Capital, then communistic propaganda will quickly be in every public school in America, and it will not be long before this same communistic influence will remove the crosses from the steeples of our churches in every city in America.

Great sacrifices and much American blood has been spilled in the preservation of our American ideals and in the protection of religion here in the United States; Communists say "religion is opium"; communism destroys religion.

I call upon our American women and our patriotic American men to rise up against this dastardly attempt to legalize the advocacy of the vile philosophies of communism in the public schools of our Nation's Capital, which, if they are successful, will be accomplished under the false guise of "academic freedom."

We, Members of this Congress, have a great responsibility resting upon us. The American people will be interested in knowing how we will measure up to it.

I appeal to the Congress to prevent this attempt on the part of the Board of Education of the District of Columbia to legalize the advocacy of communism in the public schools in Washington, our Nation's Capital, which will be quickly followed by the communistic propagandists who will force the advocacy of communism in every public school in America.

I desire to pay tribute to the rank and file of our American school teachers. I know that they stand with me. I know that they do not want nor have ever asked for the alleged "academic freedom" to permit the advocacy of communism in public schools. I hope my appeal will be heard by the Congress. [Applause.]

DISASTER LOAN CORPORATION

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration in the House as in Committee of the Whole of the bill (S. 1439) to provide for loans made necessary by floods or other catastrophes in the year 1937; and pending that, I ask to have the bill read from the desk for the information of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 1439, for its present consideration in the House as in the Committee of the Whole, and pending that asks unanimous consent that the bill be read. Is there objection to the reading of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object to ask the gentleman if he will not request that there be 30 minutes of debate, to be divided equally between the gentleman and myself?

Mr. STEAGALL. I shall be very happy to make that a part of my request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request that the bill be read?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby created a Disaster Loan Corporation with nonassessable capital stock in an amount not to exceed $20,000,000. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and directed to subscribe for such stock and to make payment therefor from time to time as called out of the unexpended balance of the $50,000,000 which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was authorized to lend for catastrophe relief by section 1 of the act of April 17, 1936 (Public, No. 525, 74th Cong.). Such Disaster Loan Corporation shall be managed by officers and agents to be appointed by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation under such rules and regulations as its board of directors may prescribe.

Such Disaster Loan Corporation shall be empowered to make, upon such terms and conditions and in such manner as it may prescribe, such loans as it may determine to be necessary or appropriate because of floods or other catastrophes in the year 1937. Such Disaster Loan Corporation may use all its assets, including capital and net earnings therefrom, in the exercise of its functions.

The Disaster Loan Corporation shall have succession until dissolved by act of Congress; shall have power to sue and be sued in any court, to adopt and use a corporate seal, to make contracts, and to acquire, hold, and dispose of real and personal property necessary and incident to the conduct of its business; and shall have such other powers as may be necessary and incident to carrying out its powers and duties under this act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 1439 in the House as in Committee of the Whole, and that debate thereon be confined to the bill for not to exceed 30 minutes, to be controlled equally by himself and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT]. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. As I understand it, this bill does not call for any new money.

Mr. STEAGALL. It does not.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It is to be taken out of a fund already available, but it does create a new corporation.

Mr. STEAGALL. Instead of using the funds by the corporation as such, it permits the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to set up a new corporation, provide for its officers, and subscribe its capital, the amount being $20,000,000. The $20,000,000 capital is to be taken out of a fund that was made available to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation under legislation which operated to afford loans for relief growing out of floods during the year 1936, and a fund of $50,000,000 set aside for that purpose.

The language of the bill provides for assistance made necessary by "floods or other catastrophes during the year 1937."

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. This will not require any new personnel?

Mr. STEAGALL. This will not require any new personnel. It is to be set up under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and the Corporation will supply necessary personnel.

Mr. NICHOLS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency if, in his opinion, the provisions of this bill are broad enough to furnish relief to people suffering from extreme drought, if the provisions of the bill are such that loans could be made to drought sufferers?

Mr. STEAGALL. I think the answer is in the affirmative. The bill has just come over from the Senate. Of course, the purpose of it is to deal with conditions that have resulted from the recent floods, with which the gentleman is familiar. Under the language of the bill, "floods and other catastrophes in the year 1937", I think the answer I made is correct. It is all limited to disasters in 1 year. The relief is limited to distress resulting from floods or other catastrophes during the year 1937.

Mr. NICHOLS. Then I take it the chairman of the committee will state for the RECORD, for the purpose of interpretation of the act if it comes up for discussion after it reaches the executive department, that it is the intent that the scope of the act is broad enough to include drought sufferers, if it were desired by the Corporation to go into that field?

Mr. STEAGALL. I should answer that in the affirmative.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. WOLCOTT. In answer to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS] I want to add that I think the original authorization of $50,000,000 is broad enough to include drought catastrophes as well as flood catastrophes, although there might be some question whether this particular bill would cover a drought catastrophe. There is no question, I believe, but that the original authorization of $50,000,000 would empower the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to cover situations such as the gentleman has in his territory as the result of a drought.

Mr. STEAGALL. Undoubtedly there is very clear intent to direct the relief afforded by this measure along the same line and for the same purpose as intended in the former act. The language employed is "floods or other catastrophes in the year 1937."

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill deals with a catastrophe, it seems, and only a catastrophe would prevent me from objecting today. We are setting up a new corporation in Congress. We are granting a charter. We are embarking upon a new policy of Federal incorporation. We are going in a direction in which we have never gone before.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I may say this is one of the few instances in which the Congress has reserved to itself the right to set up a corporation to give relief. In most other instances they have been set up as Delaware corporations, over which the Congress has no control.

Mr. MICHENER. Yes. The procedure has been that under a general act to do something the agencies created have assumed authority to take out charters under State laws.

Mr. STEAGALL. But there is no such provision as that in this bill.

Mr. MICHENER. Now we are going a step farther, and, for the first time in history, you are bringing in a bill before Congress at a time when no one expected any legislation to come up, when there is not a quorum present, and asking for a Federal corporation, a corporation with really unlimited powers, if what the gentleman said in answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from Oklahoma is true. I cannot be put in the position of standing alone and objecting to the consideration of flood sufferers; but I beseech the leadership to stop this thing and not to bring in legislation at a time like this and embarrass Members who believe in orderly procedure. Bring it in in the ordinary way. We have plenty of time. We will adjourn over tomorrow, but here you bring in something that no one knows anything about, except that the Chairman requested it be read from the Clerk's desk. But we should be thankful for that concession. I cannot object if relief is needed, but God knows we must stop this method of legislating.

Mr. STEAGALL. Let me say to the gentleman that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is already in existence, and has been since 1932. This relief is to be afforded by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and the creation of a subsidiary corporation by them is simply a method by which they simplify bookkeeping covering their transactions, and leave the Corporation to pursue its regular methods of passing upon security. This bill is for the purpose of meeting unprecedented distress and suffering, and to that end the rules under which loans may be made are liberalized to meet the necessities of the situation. But it is limited to $20,000,000 for 1 year.

Mr. MICHENER. But it embodies the principle of the holding company. We have had a fight in the last year, and many of you people made a lot of trouble about holding companies. Here you are setting up a subsidiary, another agency. You are going on down the line. I want to hear some of you people who are opposed to holding companies arise and say something. No one knows anything about the bill.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Certainly.

Mr. RAYBURN. I can say something about holding companies; I have had a little experience with them.

Mr. MICHENER. Yes; I am sure the gentleman has.

Mr. RAYBURN. And if the gentleman will remember, the holding-company bill that we passed permitted holding companies in the second degree. This cannot be a holding company in more than the second degree.

Mr. MICHENER. This bill does not violate the holding-company law because it does not go far enough, but under this procedure you can bring in another bill next week with another holding company. You are indulging in the principle.

Mr. STEAGALL. It is fair, of course, to say that this plan has none of the earmarks of a holding company, such as was involved in the legislation to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and, of course, I do not intend to object, let us see what we have here. Under existing law passed last year to meet the flood situation in New England and Pennsylvania, to afford relief to the flood sufferers in those sections, there was authorized and appropriated to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation $50,000,000 for it to make loans to the flood sufferers in those sections.

The language of that act gave the Reconstruction Finance Corporation the power to make loans. Eight million dollars were loaned to the flood sufferers under that act by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. As we know, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is primarily a loaning corporation. Under the original R. F. C. Act, loans are made upon adequate security.

Mr. STEAGALL. Full and adequate security.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Full and adequate security was required. However, under the flood-loan amendment last year, the term "reasonable" security was used. Congress called for security—reasonable security. Many who needed loans because of flood losses were unable to furnish such security. Consequently, the very purpose of Congress to aid people in distress, to aid small storekeepers getting back into business, to aid poor people in rehabilitating themselves, was frustrated by the language in that act. It is the purpose here to avoid that situation. It is the purpose here to aid those in need of loans without furnishing reasonable or any security for the loan.

This legislation creates a corporation by Congress itself. The language of the bill, in respect to loans, is liberalized. Loans are not to be made upon full, adequate, or reasonable security. People who could meet the qualifications of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation under the other act relative to security, could get money from banking institutions; and I know that Members from the districts last year affected will bear witness that the restricted language in last year's act was not effective, and did not accomplish the purpose of Congress in rendering aid to the flood sufferers to rehabilitate themselves.

The pending bill would permit the making of character loans. Nothing is said in respect of security. It may be loans of one kind and another; there is no restriction as to the kind of loan that can be made; they may be made to individuals, partnerships, or corporations, or they may be made to municipalities; and if Congress adjourns this week without the passage of this bill, it just means that such delay postpones by that many days relief to the people in the flood areas that comes to them hereunder.

I was glad to hear my friend from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] say that even though he might not like it he was not going to object.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. In line with what the gentleman is saying, is not this a fact, that last year when we had the catastrophe we authorized the R. F. C. to lend money; this year, under this set-up, if we pass this bill, the R. F. C., the Federal Government, will own all the stock of this corporation, and the R. F. C. will lend the money just exactly as it did last year, but with the exception that this time we do not require full and adequate security?

Mr. CITRON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. CITRON. As I remember the act we passed last year for the flood sufferers of Pennsylvania and New England, we changed the language of the act to require only reasonable security, instead of full and adequate security.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. But even that evidently was not sufficient.

Mr. CITRON. Was it because the language of the act was not sufficiently explicit that liberal loans were not granted?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. According to my information, the language was thought to require the granting of loans upon reasonable security. Thus they did not grant the liberal loans Congress intended when they passed that law.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I ask the gentleman seriously if he agrees with the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency who seems to convey the idea that the language of this bill is broad enough to make loans to farmers who have a crop failure in the year 1937 only? Let us assume for the moment a farmer who has had no crop failures in the last 4 or 5 years, but that in 1937 he should have a crop failure. Does the gentleman mean to say that that, under the language of the pending bill, would be construed as a catastrophe and that the R. F. C., if it saw fit, could make a loan to this farmer?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I refer the gentleman to the language of the bill:

> Floods or other catastrophes in the year 1937.

I may say to the gentleman that this is not the only relief bill passed or to be passed by this Congress. In the matter of relief to farmers, we are told that the Resettlement Administration will make loans and grants, and that they have $10,000,000 available for such purposes; that loans alone can be made; that grants alone can be made; and that grants and loans together can be made. We are also told that the Home Owners' Loan Corporation is going to make loans for repair and rehabilitation to people whose property is mortgaged to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. We are also told that the Red Cross is going to repair and reconstruct homes and provide furnishings for same, and that the Works Progress Administration is going to assist in repairing and replacing streets, roads, municipal properties, schoolhouses, and things of that kind.

The pending bill is an effort to provide for the making of character loans to people in all walks of life who cannot get loans. It will include the small store owner and other businessman who cannot furnish security for the loan. It is broad enough, of course, to extend to most every activity.

Mr. CITRON. What is the need for another corporation?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. We are going to profit by the experience of you folks in New England and Pennsylvania under the 1936 act. A Disaster Loan Corporation set up under special authority of Congress certainly ought to be more liberal than the R. F. C., whose primary thought has been security, under the law.

Mr. MICHENER. As I get it, as a matter of fact, here is the situation: The R. F. C. is a splendid corporation. It has functioned well. It has done a good job. It has good securities in its vaults, and it has been careful. Now the gentleman wants to do something that you cannot do under the R. F. C., because the loans will not be backed up by good security. You are setting up a subsidiary or a child corporation to take the bad paper. Am I right?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The gentleman may call it bad paper if he likes. He may call it bad paper if he calls paper given by people who have had their homes washed away and their stock of goods and other property destroyed bad paper. It certainly is not bankable paper.

Mr. MICHENER. I do not mean to get into the sentimentality of the matter.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. But sentiment is there. If the gentleman uses the term in the sense of not being secured, he is correct. It is paper that may not be secured in conformity with the ordinary rules and regulations of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation under other acts.

Mr. MICHENER. I just want to discover the real purpose of the corporation. The real purpose of the corporation is to make insecure loans which the R. F. C. itself cannot make?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. To make loans without the full and adequate security, or reasonable security, required under existing law; that is correct. I hope and trust that no one will interpose an objection that will kill this bill.

Mr. STEAGALL. May I say to the gentleman from Michigan I do not think he will contend that the same rule as to security should be applied to a citizen and his family who have suffered from these floods or other disasters as would be applied to a bank, insurance company, railroad, or business institution, and that should apply to the R. F. C. in making loans in other directions.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman whether or not it is possible to make the same type of loan referred to in this bill under existing law out of money appropriated for relief? In other words, the Resettlement Administration has been set up which has been making loans to farmers in the drought area and farmers elsewhere for rehabilitation purposes. Those loans have been made out of funds appropriated under an emergency relief act. Is it not possible to make the same type of loan referred to here out of the funds appropriated for the Resettlement Administration?

Mr. STEAGALL. I do not think so under existing law. The practical situation, may I say to the gentleman, is that these people are suffering, and that is the only reason the legislation is offered at this time, without having been considered by a committee of the House. It would not be brought in as is proposed except to meet the necessities of the situation that exists, due to the recent floods.

Mr. BOILEAU. When we had up for consideration the other day a bill making appropriations for relief, it was stated on the floor that one of the purposes of the appropriation would be to take care of the situation in the Ohio River flood area. It has been stated very freely by administration officials and in the press since that time that the money is available now to the President of the United States to help the situation in this flood area. As I stated, that money is available, and it has been available in the past for relief purposes and could be lent to the class of people you are attempting to aid under the provisions of this bill, just as has been the situation in the past where money was lent to farmers in the drought areas. Therefore, I do not see why we should set up this additional corporation. If there is an emergency that must be taken care of in the next few days, it may be taken care of under existing law and with existing appropriations. If I am not correct, I would like to have someone point out wherein those funds are not available for this purpose.

Mr. STEAGALL. I do not know of any funds that are available for that purpose.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. GREENWOOD. The Resettlement Administration will try to take care of the situation in the flood area; in fact, all governmental agencies are going to do that. But you cannot use the Resettlement Administration money to go into the cities and towns in order to make loans to businessmen, to small corporations, and to church people who may be responsible as character loans. This corporation will make every type of loan in the flood area that could not be taken care of by the Resettlement Administration. The provisions of this bill are much more liberal than the provisions of the basic law underlying the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. This is based to some extent on character loans. Loans may be made to churches, based on their capacity to pay, their membership, and so forth. Loans may be made to municipalities to build schoolhouses. Loans may be made to storekeepers, for instance, who may not have adequate security.

Mr. BOILEAU. I am in accord with the views expressed by the gentleman from Indiana, except I am not sure in my own mind that we cannot do these very things under existing law. I believe if we are going to pass a permanent law here we should have more time to consider it. The matter should be considered by a committee of the House so that the membership of the House would have all the necessary information.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Let me say further in answer to the gentleman that the purpose of setting up this corporation is to take care of an emergency which cannot be handled by present agencies. Under existing law the Resettlement Administration, which was created for the purpose of taking care of other matters, cannot go into the cities, for instance.

Mr. BOILEAU. The Resettlement Administration was created by Executive order.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I am not arguing how it was created.

Mr. BOILEAU. If the President could create that organization by Executive order, why can he not by Executive order extend their lending powers to take care of the type of loans the gentleman is now referring to and use emergency funds for the time being?

Mr. GREENWOOD. Forty-two million dollars of flood-relief money appropriated last year is still available in the hands of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the purpose of taking care of flood sufferers.

Mr. BOILEAU. I grant the difficulty of getting money out of that fund.

Mr. GREENWOOD. The basic law of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation will not permit them making this kind of a loan, but if we set up this corporation to operate on character loans it may use that money, and in addition to that the Resettlement Administration can go into other fields.

Mr. BOILEAU. I grant to the gentleman that under existing law the R. F. C. could not make the type of loans referred to here, and which I believe to be desirable in this instance.

I am of the opinion, although I may be wrong, that this type of loan could be made out of money appropriated for relief. A part of the $789,000,000 we appropriated the other day, in my opinion, could be used to make this type of loan. If I am wrong, I shall not object to the present consideration of this bill, because I believe it is important that something should be done immediately.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I think the gentleman is in error. I am sure the gentleman understands that they are going to use the Resettlement Administration to make all loans on farms where money is available. They are going to use the W. P. A., the Red Cross, and every other agency in furnishing relief, but in order to use the money now in the hands of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation we must empower them to do so under the language of this bill.

Mr. BOILEAU. I want to have a definite statement, if I may, from the gentleman from Indiana or the chairman of the committee sponsoring the legislation, as to whether or not under existing law it is possible to make this type of loan out of money appropriated for emergency relief. We have been making this type of loan in the drought area out of emergency relief funds, and in view of that fact why can we not make the same type of loan in the area the gentleman is referring to?

Mr. STEAGALL. The thing we are trying to do is to leave the relief agencies the job of relief and where loans are to be made we are trying to set up at the same time a liberal system by which such loans may be made.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman is not consistent in that respect because we have been making loans right along through the Resettlement Administration and they are loans that are of the same general character as the ones we are referring to now.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, as I understand, loans will continue in the rural sections under Resettlement. I have not positive knowledge about it, but my information is that they have not the authority under existing law in Resettlement or in the other existing agencies to make loans upon these terms.

Mr. BOILEAU. That is just the point I have in mind. The gentleman is not sure about it, and the gentleman from Indiana is not sure about it. The chairman of the committee ought to be positive about it one way or the other.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I stated that I thought the gentleman was in error, because we are proposing to make a different type of loan.

Mr. BOILEAU. It may be a different type of loan, but it anticipates the same type of security.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I may say to the gentleman that we were definitely informed there was no authority of law to make loans of this character outside of the rural areas where Resettlement operates.

Mr. BOILEAU. If the gentleman wants to take the responsibility of making that statement to the House, I shall be satisfied.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I may say to the gentleman that that information came to a group of us yesterday afternoon.

Mr. BOILEAU. I assume the information came from a source that is reliable, and I assume further that the gentleman is speaking with authority, and therefore I shall not object.

The regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COOPER). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, not having anything in writing before the House, I object.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I want to use a moment or two, and I do not care to yield, because the time is limited and there has been already considerable discussion of the matter before the House. This is not a relief measure in the same sense that relief is sought to be accomplished by relief agencies heretofore established. There is no agency upon which authority has been conferred by the Congress to make loans such as are provided in this bill. The only way that such relief may be accomplished is under some kind of new legislation. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation, under its general rules, is restricted to loans that are fully and adequately secured. There have been at times amendments to the law for specific purposes changing the rule, but that is the general rule.

This bill undertakes to liberalize the rules under which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may make loans. Under the provisions of this bill the Corporation will set up a subsidiary corporation and supply necessary officers. These officials will make rules and regulations under which loans for relief due to floods and other catastrophes in 1937 may be available. The subsidiary corporation would have authority to take each community or each situation into consideration and apply liberal, sympathetic administrative methods in lending the funds made available. This is the only way now practicable by which Congress may afford this kind of relief to the people in this unprecedented distress.

This is the reason the bill has been offered in the hasty manner in which we are undertaking to proceed. I do not believe any Member can fail to understand just what is before the House and just what is intended to be accomplished.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MICHENER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MICHENER. Is there any possible way whereby a man can get 5 minutes to discuss a bill not printed, never been before the committee, a typewritten copy read from the rostrum, and we do not know what it is? A Member cannot get 5 minutes to talk about it, and if that is not railroading I would like to know what it is.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time for debate be extended 5 minutes and the gentleman from Michigan be given that time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the time for debate be extended 5 minutes and that that 5 minutes be given to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER]. Is there objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. And that 5 minutes is not to be taken out of the time for this side?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is correct. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON], who is very reliable in all matters and very courteous, handed me a page and a half of typewritten matter and says that he will not vouch for it but to the best of his knowledge it is a true copy of the bill that was read by the Clerk.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I said it was a copy presented to me by the legislative counsel of the Senate and purported to be an identical copy of the bill reported by the Senate committee and passed by the Senate. I have not checked it word for word, period for period, comma for comma, but I take it as a copy on reliable information.

Mr. MICHENER. That is what I said. The gentleman has only amplified and enforced what I said.

As I said a while ago, it is difficult to make a fight against the consideration of this measure, because we are told that there are people in sections of the United States who need immediate relief. God knows we want to help them. But we ought not to pass a bill of such far-reaching importance in a few minutes without knowing what is in it. We ought not knowingly to permit Congress to pass legislation without Congress knowing what it is.

Here we are setting up a subsidiary corporation for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. That is, the R. F. C. is to become a holding company. We are incorporating a $50,000,000 corporation responsible only to its parent. We are giving birth to this new agency and the only limit on its life is possibility of Congress passing legislation in future years winding up its affairs. Another agency to spend money. Those here with experience know that is to be a permanent creation. Who ever heard of one of these spending instrumentalities being willing to close up? No, my colleagues, its powers and functions will be enlarged. It will be the agency of the Government authorized to make loans, many of which will be indirect grants. He is an optimist, indeed, who believes that all of these loans will be repaid.

Only those Members whose constituents are to borrow this money ever heard of this bill. The majority floor leader never read the bill. He thought that it was some minor matter. The bill has never been before a committee. Like Topsy, it comes from nowhere, but it has the usual "emergency" label, and for that reason it is to be rushed through without debate and with but a few of the faithful on the floor. From whom are we to get any information? The chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee is in charge of the bill, but he is acting without committee authority.

The committees of the House are created for a purpose, and that is the only orderly way to consider legislation. The House is entitled to the report of the committee, and not the report of a few individual Members whose districts are to be the beneficiaries under the law. I am not criticizing the measure, because we know nothing about it; but I most sincerely criticize the majority leadership for bringing in such important a matter at such an inopportune time. Before our adjournment on yesterday it was stated that no important legislation other than that designated would be called up today. Many Members are not present, and I am opposed to this small group breaking all precedents and granting a Federal charter permitting a corporation to make such indefinite loans.

During the last 4 years, legislation has been passed through this Congress without even being printed before considered, and I have asserted that I would not permit this practice to be followed if I could help it. But we all know that we have just gone through a great flood; we are told that people are hungry and that this bill will bring them relief. As a matter of fact, those familiar with the situation know that this bill could just as well be passed tomorrow as today; but if the consideration is delayed, possibly more questions might be asked and more safeguards placed about the Treasury of the United States.

I undoubtedly am responsible for holding up the consideration for the last few minutes, and I am ready to assume that responsibility. If it does nothing more, let us hope that it will make for orderly procedure and commonsense deliberation in the future.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In the gentleman's opinion, would a person who suffers a fruit-crop loss as the result of a hard frost be able to get a character loan under this resolution?

Mr. MICHENER. Great Caesar! Man, I have not had time to read the resolution, and no one else has, except a few people who happened to know about it.

Mr. GREENWOOD. If one man should lose a fruit crop, that would not be any test.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Then let us assume that 80 percent of the crop is lost.

Mr. GREENWOOD. If a drought should come along or a frost that would destroy a whole crop or a large portion of it, that would be considered broad enough to be covered by this resolution; but it is not for one man or two men or a half dozen but something growing out of a general disaster.

Mr. MICHENER. Then if there was another grasshopper scourge in the Middle West this summer, there could be a loan made for that; or if we had a little windstorm in my district, this corporation would be permitted to loan under those circumstances. There is no limitation as to the extent of the disaster or the size of the loan. We are just setting up another corporation without limit on its authority to loan money out of the Treasury of the United States. Believe me, there will be plenty applicants. Already those about me are preparing amendments to make the law retroactive and to increase the capital. This new corporation will eventually mean more personnel. We are establishing a precedent that will come back to plague us. This relief, if necessary, should be provided without Congress granting a Federal charter.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. I thank the gentleman from Michigan, the ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency. This measure proposes to make small loans to people who suffered because of the flood or other causes; but that is possible under the law today, or it would be if the venerable Jesse Jones, Chairman of the R. F. C., would administer the law in accordance with the intent of Congress. Am I correct in assuming that the passage of this measure will make such loans more easily accessible to the people who need them?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I cannot speak for the Chairman of the R. F. C., but I would assume that the granting of loans under this bill might establish a precedent by which the R. F. C. might be more liberal with its loan policy concerning loans to small industry.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I have yielded myself only 3 minutes.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the courtesy of the gentleman from Michigan. At least the expected passage of this bill will evidence to Mr. Jones and the R. F. C. that it is the will of Congress that these loans be made. Up to the present time he has disregarded our will.

Mr. WOLCOTT. At least it will as to flood relief.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes; though I have only 3 minutes.

Mr. STEAGALL. I will yield the gentleman 2 minutes. I just want to interject this one remark in answer to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KOPPLEMANN], who charged the R. F. C. with having disregard of the law of Congress. I think almost everybody except the gentleman from Connecticut believes that that Corporation has followed the law.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. There are many Members on this floor who will agree with me.

The purpose of the measure before us is without question laudable. I am in complete sympathy with its provisions. I do not oppose the measure, but I question the wisdom of placing its administration in the hands of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, an agency to which has been entrusted, in more than one respect, the duty of rehabilitating certain groups in our economic life which have been adversely affected by the depression and by emergencies.

Last year the Congress passed the Kopplemann-Walsh Act, allocating $50,000,000 for the rehabilitation and relief of business and industry crippled by the floods. The measure was considered so important that within a month after its introduction it was signed into law. There was no delay in discussion either in committee or in the House and Senate. The entire Nation had been shocked and alarmed by the unprecedented disaster and everyone in any way connected with the matter urged the speedy passage of the law and were for it.

Fifty million dollars was allocated to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation last April; $8,000,000 has been disbursed; $42,000,000 remains idle in the coffers; and business and industry, severely hit by the floods of last spring, have yet been unable to secure the help provided under this law.

Now, this measure calls for a more lenient and sympathetic consideration of applicants pleading for help. It goes so far as to suggest that no collateral be required in instances where the damage was extreme.

Small business and industry, the type which most sorely needs the help intended by this measure, has had previous experience with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. That body prides itself on its hard-boiled attitude and refuses to invoke the powers given it by Congress to help the needy.

In June 1934 there was incorporated in the Banking Act a provision giving the Reconstruction Finance Corporation the power to loan $300,000,000 to small business and industry seriously handicapped by the lack of credit and loans from their local banks.

This money was supposed to have been disbursed within 6 months following enactment of the law. That period was very critical for the small businesses and industries, and it was hoped that Government aid available to them—as it was to the banks, railroads, insurance companies, and other large corporations—would give them the necessary operating capital and the funds to take advantage of increased business, which was beginning to flow.

Sad to relate, by far the greater amount of this money also is still idle. Restrictions and requirements imposed upon the applicants who sought Government aid as a last refuge were such that had they been able to meet them they would not have had to apply to anyone for help.

Time and again criticism has been launched against the policies of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Time and again complaint has been raised that the agency empowered to do a vast amount of good stunts its power through a "glass eye" interpretation of the law which Congress passed.

The concerns applying for help under the Emergency Flood Rehabilitation Act were likewise in bad shape—very bad shape. Their stocks had been ruined, plants and equipment had been damaged. Here was the opportunity for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to prove itself sympathetic with the plight of those upon whom disaster had been inflicted. Here was its opportunity to extend a helping hand, as Congress intended, to those whose misfortune could not have been avoided by no matter what amount of business acumen and foresight.

My own district was one of those most severely hit. Yes; the Reconstruction Finance Corporation made a great show by establishing temporary emergency offices in the localities hit by the flood, so that a personal touch could be given their work—a personal contact with the applicant seeking aid. But again most of these applicants were denied. The hard restrictions imposed on applicants were such that even when loans were finally authorized by the R. F. C. the applicants withdrew or canceled their applications in disgust.

With its past record, how can we expect continued or further cooperation on the part of the R. F. C. with those in acute distress? There have been other emergency agencies established for the purpose of giving help, ordinarily available through private sources, but withdrawn during the depression. Except in rare cases these have fully complied with the letter of the law and their contribution toward the rehabilitation of America and the American people will go down in history. Except for help given to big business, and financial institutions, I am ashamed of the record of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. It has conclusively proven that the little fellow can expect no sympathy from that agency.

Another disaster has been inflicted upon the country. Its victims cannot be counted. Its damage cannot be estimated. Relief is needed. Rehabilitation is needed. But both rehabilitation and relief must be administered, with sympathy combined with dispatch, which alone can bring our victimized States, our suffering people out of the despondency into which they have been submerged, and back to the comfort and hope in the future which has been the underlying motive of this administration, which is the right of every American citizen.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, if I have been correctly informed, my understanding is that it is absolutely necessary to pass this bill today, otherwise we will place ourselves in the position of denying to thousands of flood sufferers that relief which I believe every Member of this Congress wants to give to them. If that was not my understanding, I would not advocate the passage of this act, because we should give more consideration to it than is permissible under the present procedure. I ask the sponsors of this bill whether or not there is money available today by which the President might give the relief which is sought under this bill? If there is money available under the $790,000,000 relief bill which we have passed, or what is left of the $4,800,000,000 bill of 2 years ago, or the $1,241,000,000 bill which we passed last year, or the $3,300,000,000 relief bill we passed in 1934, then we should oppose this with all the vigor at our command, so that we might give ourselves an opportunity to determine whether it is to be the policy of this Congress that the R. F. C. must again be called upon to allocate further money for relief.

It is my understanding that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation today shows a paper profit of something like $150,000,000. That does not take into consideration, as I understand, about $3,000,000,000 which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has, up to the present time, allocated for relief purposes for which there is no opportunity of reimbursement to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation was not set up originally for this purpose, but we have constantly used it for this purpose. I am going to ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL] or anyone who has authority to speak on behalf of the administration, whether anyone will suffer within the next week if this House does not pass this bill today?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has again expired.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

Mr. GREENWOOD I have no authority to speak for the gentleman from Alabama or the administration, but it has occurred to me that the emergency is so great, with this floodwater going out of stores, lumber yards, and various small businesses in the cities, and they are waiting for just such loans as these.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It is my understanding that the President has recently said in substance that he would not see anyone suffer in the flood regions, even if he had to use the whole of the $790,000,000. If that is true, it is evidence that he thinks he has authority to use immediately the $790,000,000 which we authorized the other day; and if that is true, why is it necessary to set up this corporation today?

Mr. GREENWOOD. He has authority to use that for certain purposes, but there is in the hands of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation $42,000,000 carried over from last year, and we are liberalizing the law of a year ago so that they can use that for the specific purpose that Congress intended in this emergency.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Now, to shorten it up, will the gentleman on his own responsibility tell me that anyone is going to suffer within the next week unless we pass this bill?

Mr. GREENWOOD. In a conference with Mr. Hopkins yesterday, who had surveyed the whole situation, he said this was the best way to get this relief—to use this money that was available.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The point is, it is necessary?

Mr. GREENWOOD. He said so.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I will take the gentleman's word for it and go along with him on that understanding.

Mr. GREENWOOD. He was in conference with the President.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has again expired.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed 2 minutes in addition to that originally allotted to me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, we have already consumed quite a little time in discussing matters which have to do with the mechanics of this bill and with the possible objections that may be made to it, but I hope we can now get down to the serious phases of this bill, because it is a very serious matter to those of us who live in the flooded districts.

The Ohio River washes past my district for more than 150 miles, and about 75,000 of my people are just now sadly working their way through the mud back into their homes. I appreciate the objection raised by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER], and I think his contribution was very timely and very much worth while. It tended to clarify the matter so that the real purposes of the bill can be understood. I also appreciate the very important question asked by the other gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT]. He is trying to clear the atmosphere also. I cannot give him any authentic assurance as to what the administration will do, for, of course, I cannot speak for the administration. I am the only Republican Congressman in this whole flooded district from the source of the Allegheny to the mouth of the Mississippi, but nevertheless you know the flood reaches the just the same as it reaches the unjust.

I think, however, there is a very marked distinction between this bill and some of the other bills we have been talking about, and that is this: The President is not a lending agency.

The President has this $790,000,000 at his disposal, but the President of the United States does not make it a business to loan money. The President of the United States should not be a money lender. What we propose to do by this law is to loan some money. We are going to have four great agencies at work in this great program of rehabilitation. Each of these agencies is doing fine work. One of them is the Red Cross. Another is the W. P. A. Another is the Resettlement Division, and another is this agency which we are seeking to establish in this bill, and which will do what neither of the other three can do. The Red Cross has been busily at work ever since the beginning of the flood. This great organization is essentially a relief organization. It is a charitable organization. It runs readily on errands of mercy. It reaches all parts of the world, but it does not lend money. They do not lend money to anybody, but the Red Cross is going to put people back into their homes. It is going to take poor people whose homes have been seriously damaged or completely damaged and completely rehabilitate them. It will say to those whose houses have not washed away but are in such bad condition that they are not fit for occupancy that the owner should rehabilitate himself if he can. But if he cannot do so, the Red Cross will consider his case and will give him such assistance as their representatives think he should have, taking into consideration his loss, the number in his family, his earning capacity, and such other factors as will enable them to determine his just needs. The Red Cross will in some instances no doubt make material repairs to dwellings and give financial assistance to small business concerns. It will do the same class of work which it has always done and which has given it the wonderful reputation which it enjoys around the world.

Another great agency that is going to operate is the W. P. A. Up until this time this organization has operated with relief labor exclusively, and it has operated only on public land, except when public health has been involved. But these regulations have been changed so any man who wants to work can be employed by W. P. A. if his work is needed, and this without regard to whether he is or has been on relief. This will enable W. P. A. to give employment to a man who has lost all he has and thereby give him an opportunity to earn money with which to rehabilitate himself. The W. P. A. men will also be enabled to work on private property in clean-up programs. They will be enabled to help people clean out their homes and their premises and they will also be empowered to repair roads and bridges and to clean and repair streets. Also to clean and repair schoolhouses and public buildings and churches. All the W. P. A. does will be done free of cost. The Red Cross and the W. P. A. will render charitable work and will not lend money.

And this act is not intended for the benefit of the farmers, for they will be expected to be taken care of under the Resettlement Division. I am advising the farmers of my district that they should make arrangements to apply to the Resettlement—and if I am wrong about this I want to be corrected. Resettlement, as I understand, can give grants to people that are destitute and they can also lend money. If this is the case, the farmers in our territory who have suffered from the flood must, if they seek relief, make application to the Resettlement. If they are destitute and without any credit, they will be eligible to receive a gift or grant to help them along. If they have credit, they might be assisted to some extent by a grant, but they will be assisted also to get a loan.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes; I am glad to yield to my distinguished friend and neighbor.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. And the Resettlement Administration has something like $10,000,000 available for this purpose?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes. I am advising my farmers to contact Resettlement, telling them that Resettlement will give them money to buy a horse or a team if their horses have been carried away by the flood and if they have no money or credit to replace them. Likewise, the Resettlement will do what it usually does by way of resettling the farmer on his farm. It will also lend the farmer money on favorable terms. They are primarily a lending agency and not a charitable agency. The Red Cross will also operate among the rural people and will do as much to rehabilitate a rural man as a city man.

But what are we going to do about the city man, about the small businessman? In my home city of Ironton, Ohio, practically every plate-glass window was broken. The fronts of most of the stores were torn out. The counters, the furniture, and showcases in practically every store were completely destroyed. The population of this city is 20,000. Ninety-five percent of it was under water. In some places the water was over the top of large two-story houses and in the second story of most of the business houses. What are we going to do for the small-business man? We have helped the drought sufferers. I voted to help them. Yes; we have helped everybody else, and now we must help the small-business man. What kind of help is he asking?

Under this bill he is not asking for a gift or a grant as the farmer has been allowed under Resettlement. I repeat, he is not asking for a gift out of this; he will not get a gift out of this. What he wants is a chance to borrow quickly at a cheap rate and on easy terms. The Red Cross will help him to get cleaned up and may help him some financially, but only in exceptional cases. He owes some money, we will say, to the bank, or to some mortgage company, and there is a mortgage on his property. Neither bank nor mortgage company will stand aside; he cannot say to the banker or the mortgage company, "Stand back and let me put a mortgage ahead of yours." They will not do that; no, of course they will not. All that we are asking is that the R. F. C., or this new corporation founded in this bill, lend money to this man. We do not need to worry about this new corporation opening wide some great door. Why? Because they have only $20,000,000 to spend. In these days of billions this is a small amount, and they have got to spend it in 1937; it is limited all around. It will be loaned only to flood sufferers from the floods of 1937. This is the only way we can get money for these small-business men. If you know of any other way by which the Government can help meet the immediate needs of thousands of our small-business men and some of our larger concerns, which employ large numbers of laboring men, then we would be glad to have you come forward with such a plan.

The Red Cross comes into these flood districts and moves people's goods, gives them food, supplies, dishes, and may give small sums of money to those in immediate need. The Red Cross will do that much for them, but it cannot do much to help the little-business man or the home owner in a financial way. The businessman is generally a pretty good fellow. He may owe a little money; he may have a mortgage on his home, but he says, "Now, if I could get a little money, I could put my house in shape and I could go back in business. I do not want it as a gift; I want to borrow it and pay it back."

Mr. Speaker, this is the reason why we are insisting on this bill, because we want these four fronts to move together: W. P. A., Red Cross, the Resettlement, and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman will remember, touching the flood of last year, that we put in that bill a provision that the R. F. C. was to lend on reasonable security, not adequate security, intending to suggest to them that it make it possible for men to get money, whether they ever paid it back, in those circumstances. Unless we make it mandatory are we going to get anything?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I do not think it would be necessary to make it mandatory because that would encourage those who might not be deserving to cause a lot of trouble in pushing their demands. We must trust to the humanity and sympathy of those who are to administer this law to do justly and deal fairly.

When the Red Cross goes through these flooded areas it will give the people first-aid relief. They will give everything they think is necessary within the limit of their operations. They will put the people in their homes. The Red Cross may in most cases furnish all that is necessary by way of gifts. Then the W. P. A. will do the clean-up work for them. If this is not sufficient, then this new corporation will be available for furnishing additional money by way of a loan to city people and small-town people, while the Resettlement will deal primarily with farmers. Not a dollar of this will be handed out as a gift; it will be loaned with the understanding it will be repaid. Most of it will be repaid. But what if some of it or all of it should not be repaid, what is $20,000,000 as a contribution by this great Government when the rest of the people all over this country have already given the Red Cross more than $20,000,000 in money as well as the great quantities of food and clothing that have poured into the flooded areas from the sympathetic people all over the country? The people of the United States will absolutely ratify what we do today because they have already done so from their own pockets by contributions to the Red Cross.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I am in sympathy with reasonable loans. I am very sorry that the language of the Flood Relief Act we passed last year was not sufficiently clear and mandatory to secure loans upon the reasonable basis we intended; and I have records from my own district substantiating my statement.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I am sorry to know that that seems to be the universal experience of those who suffered in last year's floods. I hope we will profit by that experience and let the lending agency know that we are not requiring the caution of a Shylock when dealing with these people who are fighting their way back with valor that is an honor to them as American citizens.

From what the gentleman from West Virginia says, and from what I hear from others, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has been extremely careful with its loans to flood sufferers. They were bound by certain regulations, and that might be the reason why the money was not more easily available. I am sorry for that, and I hope the limitations here will be more liberal, not because I want my people to have something for nothing but I want them to get an opportunity to come back. You must remember that when you give a poor person a little help or when you lend him a little money you are not compensating him for all his loss; you are not giving him anything for his tragic experiences in trying to save his home from the cold, merciless water; you are not compensating him for the risks he took to save the lives of his family and himself; you are not compensating him for sleeping on the schoolhouse floor for a week or two and standing in the bread line for his soup and coffee; you are not compensating him for the loss of all his life's savings and the loss by his family of all their earthly possessions; you are only helping him to help himself. I know this bill will pass today. There will not be an opposing vote. We will appreciate it, for we want to move immediately on every front with these four armies of relief—the Red Cross, the W. P. A., the Resettlement, and the R. F. C. When a man wants to get back to his home, he wants to get back right away. They want to go back now. These people are going back and they should be helped. Relief next week will be too late for many. Relief next month will be too late for most. Relief in 3 months will be no relief at all.

Mr. KRAMER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. KRAMER. May I say that California and the States on the Pacific coast have contributed largely through the Red Cross to the sufferers in this area. The States on the Pacific coast, and, in fact, all States in the Union, have not objected to the loans being made because these people have lost their property. It has gone down the river.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I appreciate the gentleman's contribution. We have lost heavily. What you do by passing this bill will not in any measure adequately compensate them for their losses, but it will once more show to the world that sympathy and charity are yet live virtues with the American people. It will hearten a people whose distress sorely tried them when the waters of the mighty river threatened their very existence, and it will encourage them as they courageously advance to the task of rebuilding again their homes and places of business. Ours is a great country. Our misfortunes are great, as are our resources; we must repair the damages and set ourselves to the task of seeing to it that future generations may not suffer from these disastrous floods. "Old Man River" must be harnessed and kept in his place. [Applause.]

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GREENWOOD].

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment the gentleman from Ohio for making a very sensible and generous speech in interpreting the purposes of this act. Of course, he is in a flood area like some of the rest of us, and knows of the great necessity for acting and acting at once to furnish this avenue of credit to people who would not have any other opportunity to borrow. We want all of these Government agencies to move at once. The others are moving. The Red Cross and other agencies of the country have subscribed some $12,000,000. There will probably be a $400,000,000 loss in this flood area. This appropriation of $20,000,000 is not out of proportion to what a Federal contribution should be, in view of the fact that people all over the country have contributed generally for the very purpose we are now proposing.

Furthermore, there was $42,000,000 left over from a fund last year which was specifically prescribed by the Congress for use for flood relief. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation had its hands tied under the previous law in connection with making character loans. They could lend on reasonable security, but the act was interpreted that loans to be made by this Corporation had to have perhaps adequate security. These loans will be based upon the honor of the borrowers who are in need and who are confronted by an emergency. For instance, if a church in a community wants to rebuild its pipe organ, or pews, or replace carpets, it can borrow the money. A municipal corporation to cover immediate pay rolls, or a school corporation desiring to pay teachers or remodel or mend the losses in connection with a school building, can get the money and get it at once. Small-business men, storekeepers, lumber yards, small factories, and others will have the opportunity to borrow out of this fund.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. PARSONS. It was stated a while ago we ought to take this money out of the emergency-relief appropriation which was passed a few days ago. But it is absolutely necessary to pass this legislation in order that we may use the balance the R. F. C. has available at this time?

Mr. GREENWOOD. That is right. Besides, there is already allocated these funds and W. P. A. money for projects all over the country. If these funds are shifted, they will have to be reimbursed, and this will act as a reinforcement of those funds.

Mr. CITRON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. CITRON. Would the gentleman object to an amendment providing for relieving the flood sufferers of 1936, because many of them applied for loans but were refused?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I would not have any objection, but I think the Members of the House would, because this is intended to cover catastrophe relief for the year 1937, and is not intended to be retroactive in any sense.

Mr. CITRON. I do not suppose this bill refers to any one particular area?

Mr. GREENWOOD. No; this covers any catastrophe that may come up in 1937 in any portion of the country.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I think the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. CITRON] has raised a proper point. A part of the money was made available last year. Nineteen thirty-six should be included with 1937.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I would have no objection, but it was not intended that this measure should reach back and become retroactive, but only to take care of the emergency that has recently risen.

Mr. CITRON. The reason for my suggestion is that the R. F. C. refused the applications of many people in my section. Most of these applicants were for small loans. I favor helping the needy, and in emergencies I believe our Federal Government should. That is why we amended the R. F. C. Act, for flood sufferers last year, in a spirit of human kindness.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I may say this is a Senate bill that has already passed the Senate.

Mr. CITRON. I shall certainly be glad to vote for this measure, but I hope the gentleman will allow an amendment to provide for the 1936 sufferers. My amendment is fair and necessary. While we passed humane legislation last year, I sometimes wonder if those who administer the same appreciate the intent of Congress to aid and assist.

Mr. GREENWOOD. There are $42,000,000 of that fund left from last year.

Mr. CITRON. Let us add $20,000,000 more to the $20,000,000 this bill proposes and if there are any people in New England, or in the Ohio River Valley or other sections entitled to receive assistance, let us give it to them. Let us give the same benefits to last year's sufferers, to those whose applications were turned down, the benefit of this measure, which I admit is just and humane. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE].

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I would indeed be remiss in my duty to my constituents and to every natural instinct if I did not take a deep interest in this legislation. I represent nine counties, eight of which border on the Ohio River, and the people of those eight counties have been sorely afflicted by the recent flood that has visited that area.

The Disaster Relief Corporation, I believe, can furnish great relief to these people. I hope and trust it will be administered in the liberal spirit in which the Congress of the United States expects it to be administered. This is not a holding company. It is a humanitarian agency of the Government to carry forward a great purpose, namely the relief of distressed people. We need not worry about setting up holding companies this afternoon, nor do I think the technical rules of the House should stand in the way of furnishing the immediate means of relief through this newly constructed agency.

I trust I may say with perfect propriety that yesterday afternoon we had a conference with Mr. Hopkins, who stated that if this bill were passed today and this corporation created, he expected it to be operating in the stricken area by the end of the week. When expedition is needed so much we certainly cannot afford to delay the passage of this measure.

Of course, the farmer can receive relief from the Farm Credit Administration, and we have been told they will increase the loans to the farmers. The Home Owners' Loan Corporation will increase loans to the people in the cities, and the Resettlement Administration will continue to function, but none of these agencies can exercise the functions of this corporation. The Disaster Relief Corporation will occupy a peculiar place in the relief program. The $790,000,000 which is at the disposal of the President of the United States will not be loaned to the people of America. This will be distributed as grants for reemployment. I hope and trust that not only will the Disaster Relief Corporation exercise a very useful function but that it will be supplemented by the other agencies of the Government in affording relief which even this corporation will not be able to give, because many of the people in the stricken areas not only need loans but they need direct grants to retain their homes and to reestablish themselves as useful citizens in the communities where they live.

I have no doubt the House will pass this bill unanimously, because it will serve a purpose which I know is dear to the hearts of all the people. We in the Ohio Valley have a peculiar interest in it today, because our people are stricken. But tomorrow you on the Pacific coast or you in the Northwest or the Northeast or you in some other section of the country may meet with some catastrophe and you will then need the help of the Government of the United States, and we Representatives of the present stricken area will certainly come to your rescue, as we hope you will come to ours today. [Applause.]

(Mr. SPENCE, Mr. JENKINS of Ohio, Mr. WHITE of Ohio, Mr. O'NEAL of Kentucky, Mr. KRAMER, Mr. WHITE of Idaho, Mr. KOPPLEMANN, Mr. CITRON, Mr. CROWE, Mr. MICHENER, Mr. CHAPMAN, Mr. FOCHT, and Mr. GREGORY asked and were given permission to revise and extend their remarks in the RECORD.)

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question of the gentleman from Alabama with reference to this bill?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. I notice that this bill is so drawn that 20 years from now the corporation could make a loan on account of any disaster that occurred during 1937. I think the measure ought to be tightened up in that respect, so that this lending power should only extend through the current year of 1937 at any rate.

Mr. STEAGALL. Of course, the corporation can be dissolved at any time by the Congress; and, of course, any amendment to the bill would mean delay and would jeopardize the purpose we are seeking to accomplish by calling this matter up in the hurried manner in which we have.

Of course, as a practical proposition the gentleman will agree, I am sure, there is no likelihood there would be any abuse of any such power as he has in mind, assuming his view of the matter is correct.

Mr. TABER. I understand there is agitation right now which suggests that loans should be made now on account of the 1936 floods.

Mr. STEAGALL. Oh, that is in the immediate past; 1936 has just gone into history, and it is not at all unthinkable that applications may be still pending and may be granted under the authority of the 1936 act.

Mr. GREENWOOD. If the gentleman will permit, this bill covers any catastrophe of 1937 only, and if there are any applications for loans due to what may have happened in 1936, they could not be considered under this bill.

Mr. TABER. That is true, of course; but loans could be made as far off as 20 years from now under this bill.

Mr. GREENWOOD. The affairs of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation are going to be under consideration here from time to time, and Congress at any time can provide any such limitation.

Mr. TABER. Would it not be better to amend this bill so that the power would only continue perhaps 3 months beyond 1937, or something of that kind?

Mr. STEAGALL. Of course, the corporation could be dissolved at any time, and it certainly would be dissolved if it abused its authority in any such manner as the gentleman seems to fear.

Mr. TABER. But no one could know about it at the time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby created a Disaster Loan Corporation, with nonassessable capital stock in an amount not to exceed $20,000,000. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and directed to subscribe for such stock and to make payment therefor from time to time, as called, out of the unexpended balance of the $50,000,000 which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was authorized to lend for catastrophe relief by section 1 of the act of April 17, 1936 (Public, no. 525, 74th Cong.). Such Disaster Loan Corporation shall be managed by officers and agents to be appointed by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation under such rules and regulations as its board of directors may prescribe.

Such Disaster Loan Corporation shall be empowered to make, upon such terms and conditions and in such manner as it may prescribe, such loans as it may determine to be necessary or appropriate because of floods or other catastrophes in the year 1937. Such Disaster Loan Corporation may use all its assets, including capital and net earnings therefrom, in the exercise of its functions.

The Disaster Loan Corporation shall have succession until dissolved by act of Congress; shall have power to sue and be sued in any court, to adopt and use a corporate seal, to make contracts, and to acquire, hold, and dispose of real and personal property necessary and incident to the conduct of its business; and shall have such other powers as may be necessary and incident to carrying out its powers and duties under this act.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I offer the amendment which I have sent to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 4, after the word "functions", strike out the period, insert a semicolon and the following: "Provided, That the Disaster Loan Corporation shall make no loans under the provisions of this act or the regulations provided herein in excess of $25,000."

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, it occurs to me that in all the corporations we have set up or that have been set up there has been a limit to the size of the loans which have been made. Inasmuch as we have kept the amount down to $20,000,000, I assume that it is the intention of the President and the corporation and the intention of this Congress to spread out the relief as widely as possible.

It is proposed to give relief to local institutions, which are capitalized at a very small amount of money and which will probably need no more than fifteen or twenty thousand dollars.

And so, in keeping with the policy of the Congress restricting the Finance Corporation throughout the history of this relief legislation, I have offered this amendment to limit the amount of the loan to these corporations, associations, or individuals to $25,000 as a guaranty to the people who are vitally affected that they will get relief under this act.

Perhaps some may say that we should leave the amount to the discretion of the board of directors. I am of the opinion that we should follow the same procedure in this respect that we have been following in limiting the amount of the loan to any individual or corporation, having in mind the bill under which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation provides loans to industry.

At first the limitation was $25,000, as reported by the committee. In the House the limit was raised to $50,000. I do not see any particular reason why we should have a limit as large as $50,000 in this bill, because it is presumed that the relief will be given to home owners and men of very small means.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes.

Mr. GREENWOOD. The purpose is not only to give relief to small-business men and home owners but to give relief to municipalities, many of whose credit is somewhat impaired. They could use this fund for the purpose of maintaining the schools or their fire department. I do not think such a limitation as that should be put into the bill. The matter ought to be left to the discretion of the corporation.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I believe that under the general provisions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act the Reconstruction Finance Corporation already has authority to grant loans to municipalities for that purpose, and it is to prevent half of this amount or the whole of this amount being loaned to one municipality or to one business or to one industry to the prejudice of many hundreds of others that I think this limitation should be incorporated in the bill.

Mr. GREENWOOD. There is no desire to prejudice any borrower. Certain municipalities, in endeavoring to maintain schools or the fire department or the other agencies of government, should not be limited to $25,000 under the law. I think the matter should be left to the discretion of the Corporation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, of course, the purpose of this legislation is to relieve distress which is general, but the benefits will inure in the main to people who would only expect to ask for a loan. There might be occasional cases of a municipality, an armory, a soldiers' memorial, possibly a church or a hospital in some instance where a loan should be made in excess of $25,000, and in such case, of course, it should be done, but the relief that will result from the lending of these funds, even though the loans might be made in larger amounts, will not be limited to those directly concerned, but any funds that are loaned in any way to anybody, whether large or small, will, in one way or another prove beneficial to the entire community involved. I share very largely the views expressed by the gentleman from Michigan, and I have not the slightest doubt that the business of the corporation will be conducted as a general rule, according to those views in making loans. The chief difficulty is we face a practical situation. The Senate has passed the bill and sent it over here. Of course, a dire emergency confronts us. Any delay means continued suffering and distress, which may be immediately relieved if we act expeditiously on this legislation. If the bill is amended, it must go back to the Senate. The practical situation is such that several days of delay are likely to result. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that in the case of municipalities, they can get relief through two agencies which have already been set up—the Public Works Administration and the W. P. A.—both of which are available to make loans or grants to municipalities and one of which has new money to the extent of $790,000,000 for the express purpose of giving work relief, and that work relief may be given by municipal building, so that if a municipality or a school district must borrow for the purpose of rebuilding, it can get this relief from the W. P. A. or the P. W. A. The situation resolves itself into this only, that this bill should be designed to give relief only to those agencies which cannot effectively get relief from the agencies which have already been established.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mr. GREENWOOD. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] is in error if he thinks that the W. P. A. can loan to a municipality.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It can grant money.

Mr. GREENWOOD. To maintain its current expenses. It can build a bridge or building or build a sewage system, and then the municipalities need to borrow money to carry on their schools and other agencies, and there could be no allocation of W. P. A. funds for that purpose.

Mr. WOLCOTT. In saying that the gentleman means that we are expected under this bill to substitute loans through this corporation for the tax money which the municipalities usually get from the taxpayers.

Mr. GREENWOOD. It is no substitute at all. It is to take care of whole cities.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I do this for the purpose of obtaining information. I tried to get a copy of the bill in order to attempt to acquaint myself with its provisions, but was unable to obtain one. I have to rely on the scanty debate which I have heard today. However, my mind goes back to last year when Pennsylvania, New England and New York, and other sections of the country had serious floods.

As a result of that flood there was intense human suffering. There was great loss of property. We tried to get a bill passed to allow the victims of that flood condition to obtain loans upon character. It was my recollection the bill finally passed required reasonable security. Now, I am in agreement with this bill. It is a proper and a humane measure. I think we can rely upon these people to pay back to the Government what they borrow, but what is good for one is good for the other. If we pass this bill without including the sufferers of the flood of last year we are in a very, very embarrassing position. We are sending out from this Chamber a bill, as far as the victims of the present floods are concerned, who receive one legislative consideration, and as far as the victims of the floods of last year are concerned receive another legislative consideration.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. It seems to me if there are some of the flood sufferers of last year who would be benefited, that is in conflict with the argument that it is necessary to pass this bill today.

Mr. McCORMACK. I think it is an important situation. We have to try to give assistance when the pain exists; that is, when it hurts. I am in favor of the bill, but I hope the proponents of the bill will include last year and increase the amount. I realize that to confine it to $20,000,000 will not meet the present purpose and include the sufferers of last year's floods, but all we have to do is to amend it to include 1936 and increase the amount to about $42,000,000.

Mr. BOILEAU. In the gentleman's opinion, do some of the people who suffered in the flood of last year need assistance now?

Mr. McCORMACK. There is no question about it.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Is it not a fact that the funds appropriated last year would be used under the proposed legislation?

Mr. McCORMACK. I so understand.

Mr. RANDOLPH. And is it not a fact that we have been unable under the old act to get the necessary loans for our people in rehabilitation?

Mr. McCORMACK. Exactly. It is not the fault of Congress. I am not going to criticize those who administer the law. It is easy to criticize other people, but they have their responsibilities. They had to obtain reasonable security, and they have to keep in mind all the requirements of the law. I was one of those who fought for character loans last year. I am for it this year. In the emergency, let us recognize the call of humanity. These loans will be made to property owners who have suffered, and we can rely upon their character.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. PARSONS. The gentleman realizes the dire necessity at this present time. The parliamentary procedure is such that I understand if this bill is amended in any form, it will be next week before it can be approved. I am willing to vote with the gentleman if he will bring in a House joint resolution to amend this act when it is established, so that it will be retroactive to the 1936 flood, but I hope the gentleman will not hold up the measure today, so that it can be approved by both the House and Senate today and signed tonight.

Mr. McCORMACK. Certainly, these is no such emergency but what it can wait until Monday. This is Thursday. There will be no loans made between now and Monday.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. McCORMACK. Gladly.

Mr. PARSONS. There is not such an emergency obtaining for the 1936 flood sufferers at the present moment. It can go over for a week or 10 days, but if the gentleman will bring in a resolution, I will be glad to support it as an amendment to this act, so that it can be made retroactive to 1936.

Mr. McCORMACK. I know the gentleman will support it, but the gentleman from Massachusetts can bring in a resolution and my distinguished friend can support it, but we might not get it passed.

Now, this is urgent in a sense, but it is not so urgent but what we can prescribe the same policy for both. I am for this bill. If an amendment were defeated I would not let my feelings interfere with voting for the passage of the bill. If an amendment is offered and it is defeated, I am going to vote for the bill, because I would not let my feelings expressed today interfere with the passage of a bill that I am wholeheartedly in support of.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. This is the time to do it, in my opinion. This concerns loss to property and a few days will not make any difference. If the Senate has not adjourned, then it is simply a question of going back to the Senate and the Senate concurring in the amendment.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Is it not true that under the provisions of this bill loans can only be granted for catastrophes in 1937, and under the old law, under this administration when they had a right to make loans they did not make them as they should have been made, and they will construe the mandatory provision in this bill to make it even harder for the 1936 people to get loans?

Mr. McCORMACK. There is a great deal to what the gentleman says.

Mr. CITRON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. CITRON. What will be the situation if there is a flood along some river and there are flood sufferers on that same river from last year who have made application for loans and have been turned down, and then their neighbors come along after a flood this year and obtain a loan?

Mr. McCORMACK. It seems to me that the situation is so apparent that argument is not necessary. In any event, many Members of this Congress will be placed in an embarrassing position, coming from States afflicted with floods last year, having their people say, "You prescribe one policy for us and you prescribe another policy for the unfortunate victims of the present flood." We ought to have one policy for everybody.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. That is particularly true in the State of West Virginia. One section of the State is devastated this year, another was devastated last year. The gentleman's point is well taken. I am for this bill, because I know how badly action is needed at once. I had hoped we might include the flood sufferers of 1936 under provisions of this new legislation but we can perhaps do that later. It should be done.

Mr. McCORMACK. I have expressed myself. If an amendment is offered and rejected I still intend to vote for the bill, but I urge the proponents of this measure to look at it in its broad, equitable, and honest sense, honest legislatively, and to offer an amendment to make the same policy apply to all flood sufferers.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. If I have any time left I gladly yield.

Mr. FOCHT. I just want to supplement the gentleman's statement as to the rehabilitation policy. There are innumerable instances in the Susquehanna and Juniata Valleys, and on the north fork of the Susquehanna River, where distress still prevails, but nothing has been done to relieve the distress of last year.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. STEAGALL. Has the gentleman from Pennsylvania introduced a bill? Has any attempt been made to amend existing law to accomplish the relief sought, to accomplish what the gentleman has in mind?

Mr. FOCHT. It was understood that it would be done under the law we passed last year.

Mr. STEAGALL. On behalf of the members of the Banking and Currency Committee, I feel impelled to say, in view of the statements and assertions that have been made here this afternoon, that there has been no proposal presented to our committee looking to further relief for sufferers of the flood of 1936.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, like my colleague from Massachusetts, I knew nothing about this bill until I came on the floor this afternoon. Had the Committee on Banking and Currency, of which I have the honor to be a member, had even a few hours in which to consider this matter, much of this debate might have been saved. This committee, furthermore, might have had its attention brought to other considerations that have not been broached here. I would lay one of them before the House.

I had some part—small, indeed, but enough to know what was going on—in the creation of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. It was never conceived that it should have more than brief life. There was never discussion of permanence for it. It was a temporary measure, to be dispensed with as soon as the emergency was over. We are told by high authority, the highest in the United States, that the emergency is over, that the depression has passed, that good times have come. If we accept this authority, then we might foresee the speedy extinguishment of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, but you are here creating an agency that is to last 20 years more, based upon the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Now, nobody would be so cruel as to wish to put the parent to death while the child was living. It is hardly to be conceived that anybody would consent to the destruction of this parent under such circumstances. We may, therefore, expect that this is introduced with the probability, surely the possibility, that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation shall continue beyond the lives of many, perhaps most, of us now here.

Certainly your committee, if it had been given a chance to consider these matters, would have faced the situation. Sir, there has been no reliance upon the orderly processes of the House. We are asked to leap before we look, we are asked to ignore the implications of this measure before we have studied and reflected.

For these reasons I remonstrate, sir. It seems to me wise to pursue always the orderly procedure in this House, a procedure based upon many, many years of experience, under which procedure there has been study of proposals before they are brought on the floor. It seems to me, sir, there should be a chance for those to whom has been entrusted the consideration of these things to study this bill so they could bring to the House a perfected measure. Because we have not had that chance, because men on the committee did not even know of the proposal in any way, shape, or manner, they were unable to give it the study that was needed.

For these reasons, sir, I believe that we ought at least to refer this matter back to the committee with instructions, if you choose, that we report tomorrow. Thus, we would give the men whom you have ordered to study these things an opportunity to do their sworn duty. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Speaker, I rise for a single purpose; that is, to ask the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency whether or not the disaster corporation that is to be set up under the terms of this bill will be given jurisdiction to make loans for such a catastrophe as has befallen my State of California in this year 1937; to wit, the catastrophe of a great frost that destroyed practically $60,000,000 worth of citrus fruits? May the orange and citrus fruit growers of California make application to the disaster corporation set up under the terms of this bill? May they make application in the same manner as would a flood sufferer along the Ohio River or in the Midwest?

Mr. STEAGALL. I would not undertake to talk about the situation in California. I would say that would be a matter for the construction of the courts.

That is a matter for construction, of course. The gentleman's interpretation, of course, is as good as mine. He knows full well this measure was drawn primarily to take care of the situation resulting from the recent distressing flood. I am not prepared to say whether under existing law the distress to which the gentleman calls attention can be taken care of or not. I think it could under relief measures that have been afforded to agricultural pursuits.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Does the gentleman believe in the event a catastrophe occurred in the year 1937, such catastrophe being an unlooked for freeze destroying trees and crops, that it would come under the definition of this measure?

Mr. STEAGALL. I think provision already exists for such catastrophe to which the gentleman refers, but I may refer him to the language of the bill which says, "floods and other catastrophes occurring in 1937."

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Was it the intention of the committee in preparing this resolution that it should cover other catastrophes that occurred in 1937?

Mr. STEAGALL. The gentleman is aware of the fact this resolution was not considered by the committee. It was taken up by unanimous consent immediately upon receipt by the House, so that there cannot be an answer to the gentleman's inquiry so far as giving the view of the Committee on Banking and Currency is concerned. The gentleman understands, of course, the circumstances full well.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOCKWEILER. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. I did not hear the reply of the distinguished chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee, and whether it was yes or no, but I may say to the gentleman from my knowledge of laws passed during the present administration, there is sufficient authority at the present time to make loans to the gentleman's distressed farmers and those whose industries have been destroyed by freezes, provided the laws were administered as written on the books today.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Has the gentleman in mind the Farm Credit Corporation and such lending agencies?

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. I have in mind the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOCKWEILER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. VOORHIS. I may say I have been in touch with many of our people in California, as I suppose my colleague from California [Mr. DOCKWEILER] has, and I understand the growers and other people in that State have taken this matter up rather definitely and clearly and have some assurance that they can get assistance through the Farm Credit Administration. Further, they have made a recommendation that there be a considerable sum, I believe $25,000,000, made available through the Resettlement Administration for assistance to those farmers and growers throughout the Nation who are not in a position to offer adequate security for loans. Like my colleague [Mr. DOCKWEILER], I would be very glad to know positively and surely that some of the funds concerning which we are now debating may be made available to California. At the same time, I feel the main purpose in passing this legislation is to deal with an existing emergency in the Ohio River Valley. I thank the gentleman from California [Mr. DOCKWEILER] for asking the question about which he is concerned, and I hope the answer to it is yes, but at the same time I would not want to press it to the point where we would hold up the pending legislation in any way, especially in view of the arrangements which California growers are making on their own behalf.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. BEITER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOCKWEILER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BEITER. May I say to the gentleman from California, who asked the direct question of the other gentleman from California, that the money is available, but you cannot get it?

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have the amendment read again by the Clerk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The Wolcott amendment was read, as follows:

Page 2, line 4, after "function", strike out the period, insert a semicolon and the following: "Provided, That the Disaster Loan Corporation shall make no loan under the provisions of this act or regulations provided herein in excess of $25,000."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CITRON. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CITRON: Page 1, lines 4 and 5, strike out "$20,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$40,000,000."

Mr. CITRON. Mr. Speaker, I offer this amendment because I have not seen any figures here to show that $20,000,000 will be sufficient to take care of flood sufferers. Those who have read the newspapers know that the amount of damage has been tremendous. It is my desire to increase the amount to take care of the people who have suffered or who may suffer from floods that may come in the next few months in other sections and areas of this country.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CITRON. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. And also this amendment is offered with the understanding that an amendment will be offered to include in this bill provisions for the flood sufferers of 1936?

Mr. CITRON. That is correct. I do not know what the number of applications of flood sufferers of 1936 for loans from the R. F. C. were. I believe we should amend the present bill by increasing the amount and subsequently amend the date in this bill to include the flood sufferers of 1936.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CITRON. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. GRISWOLD. The money the gentleman would make available, $40,000,000, is now available, having been left over from 1936; is that correct?

Mr. CITRON. I understand there is money enough to take care of the proposed amendment which I have offered.

Mr. SPENCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CITRON. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SPENCE. We had a conference, and the conferees did not seem to want to deplete the whole fund that is now available to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. This is a revolving fund, and it was felt that $20,000,000 was sufficient to meet any immediate needs. Of course, in the future it may be necessary to appropriate more money.

Mr. CITRON. According to the reports in the newspapers, the amount of damage in the flooded sections of our country in the past few weeks exceeds a half billion dollars. I have offered an amendment to make it $40,000,000 in order to take care of sufferers from any future floods in 1937, as well as those of 1936.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield so that I may ask my friend the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE] a question?

Mr. CITRON. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. In all justice and equity, does not the gentleman feel that the provisions of this bill should apply to the sufferers of the floods of last year?

Mr. SPENCE. I think it should have applied at the time the act was passed.

Mr. McCORMACK. Can we not take care of it now by a simple amendment to this measure?

Mr. SPENCE. Whether it would be advisable to do that now or not is another matter. They say that expedition means a great deal with reference to this particular piece of legislation. Mr. Hopkins told us he thought they would get to work under this bill the latter part of this week.

Mr. McCORMACK. The water is not down yet.

Mr. SPENCE. Oh, yes; it is.

Mr. McCORMACK. Nobody has more heartfelt sympathy for these people than I have; and, as I have stated, if these amendments are defeated I am going to vote for the bill.

Mr. SPENCE. And if the gentleman will propose a measure to take care of his people on the same basis that we are now trying to take care of ours, I will be pleased to go along with him.

Mr. McCORMACK. What assurance have we that it will come out of the gentleman's committee?

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, I think I can answer that question.

Mr. McCORMACK. I would like to have the gentleman answer it.

Mr. STEAGALL. The implication would seem to be that the situation to which the gentleman has just referred has not received sympathetic consideration or would not receive sympathetic consideration at the hands of the committee of this House that has charge of such legislation.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am not making that implication at all.

Mr. STEAGALL. I know the gentleman does not intend that.

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course I do not.

Mr. STEAGALL. But someone might so infer, and I want to explain to the gentleman and to the House that when the legislation covering the distress following the catastrophe, say, of 1936, to which he alludes, was before our committee——

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, when that measure was before our committee we passed it as was desired, and as it was proposed by the gentlemen interested directly as representatives of the sections that were in distress.

Let me say to my good friend that our committee has had no request for any further legislation for the relief of sufferers of 1936; neither has our notice been called to the inadequacy of that legislation or its administration until this bill was brought in here today.

I insist that this measure should not be delayed or its passage imperiled or this relief postponed in order that we may cure a difficulty that has existed, evidently, for many months, and which should have been corrected, but I respectfully insist that the Banking and Currency Committee of the House was not called upon to deal with that situation until Members directly interested called the matter to our attention; and I want to pledge the gentleman, and I am sure I can speak for every member of the committee, and, for that matter, I am sure I can speak for the House, as the gentleman knows, if that situation is shown to be distressing and one that demands relief, just as the situation for which this legislation is intended, I can assure the gentleman, and I think he will not doubt, that the Banking and Currency Committee will give immediate consideration to any legislation he may propose or that may be proposed that will take care of the situation resulting from the distress in 1936. If there has been an oversight, we will try to correct it; but do not delay this bill at this time because of our former neglect to take care of another situation.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman's statement, so far as I am concerned, has clarified the situation. The gentleman's word is known in this House. The gentleman has said that if a bill is introduced relating to the 1936 flood sufferers and seeking the same kind of legislation, the gentleman's committee will report out the bill if it is shown that the situation warrants it.

Mr. STEAGALL. I cannot say that we will report it, as I think the gentleman can well appreciate, but I think I can say, and I have no doubt the gentleman will agree, it will receive most serious and sympathetic consideration.

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course, the gentleman cannot speak for the rest of the committee, but if the gentleman gives us his assurance that he will be favorable to it——

Mr. STEAGALL. We will go as far for your people or for the 1936 sufferers, according to the necessities of the situation, as we are trying to go now.

Mr. McCORMACK. I have not a sufferer in my district, but I am trying to apply the rule of equity to all, and, so far as I am concerned, the gentleman's word is absolutely acceptable to me. It clarifies the matter so far as I am concerned, and I am willing to go along with the bill, and I hope my friend will withdraw the amendment and I hope such amendment will not be offered, but that we will go before the Banking and Currency Committee and have them bring out another bill correcting the situation.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last figure of the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, a short time ago we had a bill before the House of an emergency character and we considered it under just about the same conditions we have this afternoon. We were very much surprised that night to be advised by the press that the Senate had adjourned over the week end without granting authority to the President of the Senate to sign the bill. I see now on the floor a distinguished Member of the other body and I am going to ask the chairman of the committee whether he can determine for us whether the Senate has granted authority to the President of the Senate to sign this bill while the Senate is not in session.

Mr. STEAGALL. I am not informed.

Mr. WOLCOTT. If we do not find that to be the fact, there is no reason why we should rush this through this afternoon. If the Senate has adjourned until Monday, we might as well adjourn ourselves and consider this later.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I will yield if the gentleman can give me any information.

Mr. PARSONS. I cannot give the gentleman the exact information.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Then I do not yield.

Mr. PARSONS. I did hear the majority leader in the Senate say he was going to ask that the Vice President be empowered to sign the bill before the Senate adjourned today.

Mr. WOLCOTT. But I think we should determine that fact before we proceed further with this discussion.

Mr. PARSONS. I heard the majority leader say that he would ask for that consent to be given.

Mr. WOLCOTT. A distinguished Member of the other body is on the floor and he might advise the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, who then could advise us, whether such consent has been given. If it has not, I presume the Senate will be called into extraordinary session tomorrow, if that is possible.

Mr. RANDOLPH. If the gentleman will yield, the present legislation does not provide for loans to be made to sufferers from floods in 1936.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am not arguing the merits of the bill. I am trying to find out whether it can be enacted into law within 48 hours. If it cannot—if the Vice President has not been given authority to sign the bill—I see no reason why we should rush this through at this time.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I am in favor of the amendment to cover the flood sufferers of 1936, many of whom are in my own district.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I might say to the lady that, on the merits of the bill, I am heartily in favor of it, and I hope the Banking and Currency Committee are given opportunity to consider this bill, so that an amendment may be offered in an orderly manner to give that relief.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. CITRON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CITRON. Mr. Speaker, I believe the statement made a few minutes ago by the chairman of the committee that he would support a bill similar to this one for the 1936 flood sufferers is a fair and honorable statement; and upon that statement and the suggestions of other members of the committee that they will cooperate with him in that respect, I am willing to withdraw my amendment, and I now withdraw it. I shall introduce as soon as possible a similar bill to aid the victims of the 1936 floods. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be withdrawn. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I do not feel it is fair to withdraw that amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. With all due deference to the lady, the Chair thinks her objection comes too late. The Chair had already put the matter to the House and had asked if there was objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the lady from Massachusetts was on her feet.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I was on my feet.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I make the point of order that there is no quorum here, if that is the way that we are to run the matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In further answer, we are in the House as in Committee of the Whole, and it would be in order for the gentleman to withdraw his amendment in any event as a matter of right. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts insist upon his point of order of no quorum?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentlewoman from Massachusetts makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman withhold that for a moment?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I have checked with the Senate Journal and find that the Vice President has been given authority by unanimous consent to sign the bill at any time it comes to him.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of no quorum and offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts: Page 1, lines 4 and 5, after the word "exceed", strike out "$20,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$40,000,000."

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I am intensely interested in having the recent flood sufferers taken care of. I know very well what they are going through and what they have gone through, because we had very serious floods in my district. I do not feel that in any way their interest will be interfered with if my amendment is agreed to. I ask for a vote on my amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GRISWOLD: Page 2, line 2, after the word "the", strike out "year 1937" and insert in lieu thereof "years 1936 and 1937."

Mr. O'NEAL of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that is not germane, according to the precedents of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Indiana desire to be heard upon the point of order?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Yes. Mr. Speaker, this is not an appropriation bill or any legislation such as that. It is a bill containing general legislation under which a corporation is established. These words limiting the years would certainly be germane when we are going into legislation where we establish an entirely new corporation. It does not limit anything in the nature of the establishment of the corporation which is the primary purpose of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Kentucky desire to be heard further?

Mr. O'NEAL of Kentucky. No.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is prepared to rule. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana has for its purpose the adding of the year 1936 to the year 1937 as provided in the pending bill. The Chair has rather hurriedly, but he feels adequately, examined the decisions and precedents of the House and is of opinion that section 2913 of Cannon's Precedents, volume 8, provides a decision in point on the question here raised. That is to the effect—

To a proposition to appropriate for a general increase in salaries for 1 year, an amendment to extend the increase to another year was held not to be germane.

Because of the precedent to which the Chair has referred, he is of opinion that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana is not germane and, therefore, sustains the point of order.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MICHENER. May I ask the Chair if he took into consideration the fact that this is not an appropriation bill, that the primary purpose of this bill is to create a corporation, and that one of the incidents of the corporation is loaning money? The primary purpose being the establishment of an agency, and not specifically providing for one thing, it seems to me it would be clearly in order to permit this amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has already ruled and is sorry that the gentleman did not give the Chair the benefit of his argument on the point before the decision was made. However, it might be stated that sections 2914 and 2915 also related to the same subject. There are quite a number of precedents directly in point. Many of them relate to legislation other than appropriation bills, and the Chair is constrained to follow the precedents of the House. It was upon those precedents that the decision was made.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I appeal from the decision of the Chair, and I desire to be heard on the appeal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House. Does the gentleman desire to be heard?

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. I do.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I do this largely to get across to the Members of the House the condition in which you put Members of this House who come from districts which were flooded last year. Speaking about the consideration that was given to those Members last year, I remember that I presented a bill for some money to be used by municipalities of the districts in order to carry them across for the time they could not collect any taxes. The result was I got about 2 or 3 minutes' time at a hearing before one of the committees. Nothing ever happened to that legislation. The people in the district were taken care of by the Red Cross and by W. P. A. funds, Presidential allocation, insofar as they were taken care of. Of all those who came to me to get Reconstruction Finance Corporation loans I can say to you that not one individual case do I know of where application was made for an R. F. C. loan, where the loan was granted.

Now, you are dealing today with an emergency. For the life of me I cannot quite understand that expediency should govern our action today. I wonder how many applications have been made for loans by flood sufferers in the recent flood. The flood is still going on. I wonder how many applications have been made for loans since that flood. In 1936 we were devastated in some of the other districts of the country. We could not get legislation passed to give relief that the people needed. Now, we propose to set up a corporation which can grant the necessary relief. Then those of us who represent districts which were flooded last year are in the position of having our constituents say to us, "You are now relieving part of the country. You could not relieve us last year." We are in the predicament of being accused of being negligent in our duty as Representatives, or else in the position of granting special privilege to certain classes of our population. That is the situation in which we are.

I am sorry that a point of order was made against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRISWOLD]. I cannot see why, if this legislation were acted on in this House today and the amendment were adopted, it would seriously interfere with any of the people who need relief. I do not see how they would be handicapped in any way, because the relief organizations are working there and have been and will continue to do so. The gentleman from Massachusetts was right. The gentleman from Indiana, in his amendment, certainly has the right position. Why should we be accused of giving special privilege to one part of the population and withholding it from another?

I hope that in some way this thing can be adjusted, in order that those of us who represent districts who are now put in this peculiar and uncomfortable position by the alleged emergency character of this legislation can resolve ourselves to the point where the people will understand that we tried last year to do our duty by our constituents.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my appeal.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER: Page 2, line 4, after the word "functions", insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no loan shall be made after July 1, 1938."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, this resolution is in such shape that loans can be made under it for any disaster occurring in 1937, just so long as the $20,000,000 holds out, regardless of how long it is after 1937 that the loan is made. Everyone in Congress is familiar with the fact that these things are never wound up and these powers are never ended except by affirmative action by the Congress, and that affirmative action is almost impossible to get.

I have offered this amendment with the idea that it should be upon a reasonable and fair basis so that disasters that require loans may be taken care of, but that the thing cannot hang on forever. I can see absolutely no reason why we should not protect the Treasury by this kind of amendment. I do not believe that any delay will result which will in any way embarrass the situation in the Ohio Valley or the way in which it will be handled. It will be only a couple of days before the Senate can act on it, and we might better pass a resolution in proper form and in decent shape than to let it go through with a lot of loose ends on it and not taking care of a lot of circumstances that should be met.

I hope the House will adopt this amendment.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. May I suggest to the gentleman that his amendment is not necessary because practically no loans are being made.

Mr. TABER. If no loans are being made, or if no loans are to be made, then we ought not to be bothered spending our time all this afternoon on it. If the gentleman makes that kind of indictment against his administration, what the people ought to think of it is perfectly apparent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I offer a preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WOLCOTT moves that the bill be committed to the Committee on Banking and Currency with instructions to report the same to the House by 1:30 o'clock p. m., Friday, February 12, 1937.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, it is plain from the discussion this afternoon that we are considering something about which we know very little.

Mr. Speaker, the reason why this House has divided itself into standing committees is so that the House may be informed as a result of hearings and discussions in those committees concerning legislation which is brought out on the floor for consideration.

Touching the pending bill, Mr. Speaker, in the first place, we set up a corporation as an emergency, and we are told that we must do this today, otherwise there is going to be a great deal of suffering in the flood regions. No one has as yet told us that there are only 1½ fiscal days between now and next Monday and that it would be absolutely impossible to set up an effective corporation and authorize a loan even if they could get the Board of Directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation together in this short time before Monday. Now, there is no particular reason why the Reconstruction Finance Corporation cannot go ahead, knowing that this bill is eventually going to pass in some form or other and lay out a plan of procedure, get the details together so that when we do pass this bill next week their preliminary work will be done. This is the first point I want to make.

Another point is that of extending relief to sufferers from the floods of 1936. Why should not these localities that suffered as they did in 1936 be given the same quality of relief we are giving under this bill to the 1937 flood sufferers?

A third point, and one which has been considered here, is whether we want in this indirect manner to perpetuate the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, because there is no limitation whatsoever upon the life of the Corporation which we establish by the pending bill and no limitation upon the time in which this corporation can make loans to flood sufferers.

These are vital questions; they are fundamental questions; they should be considered by the standing committee having jurisdiction over this legislation. I am sure this discussion this afternoon has been most helpful in crystallizing these issues; and so tomorrow, after full consideration by the committee, we can consider this in very short order, having something definite before us.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on my motion to commit the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WOLCOTT) there were—ayes 36, noes 103.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill S. 1439, an act to provide for loans made necessary by floods or other catastrophes in the year 1937.

The bill was passed, and a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that, notwithstanding the adjournment of the House, the Speaker be authorized to sign the enrolled bill S. 1439

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, may I say to the Members of the House I have been somewhat embarrassed during the debate this afternoon. I thought the matter would be one involving no controversy. Frankly, I thought it was a simple joint resolution about which there would be no particular controversy. I will not be here tomorrow, but I will have someone in my place who will object to any business being transacted except the making of this speech on Mr. Lincoln.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God of the ages, author of every blessing and giver of every perfect gift, truly our soul waiteth on Thee. Behold, the Lord's hand is not shortened that it cannot save, neither is His ear heavy that it cannot hear. With Thee the night shineth as the day and the darkness as the light. The Lord God bless every section of our Republic. Hear us for our Union, strong and great, and for our glorious ship of state. With malice toward none, with charity for all, may our national ensign continue in peace and unity to float over a great people dedicated to the sacred rights of human freedom. Dwell in us, our Father; sanctify all sorrows, all strugglings, and make recovery from every misfortune. Hold in Thy merciful remembrance, O God, our Speaker and the Congress. May they ever register their patriotic devotion on the side of truth, purity, and justice. Through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to insert therein an address which I delivered over the radio last evening.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced that pursuant to the authority granted him, he did on yesterday sign the enrolled bill of the Senate (S. 1439) to provide for loans made necessary by floods or other catastrophes in the year 1937.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I may not use all of my 30 minutes, but in order that I may not be interrupted, may I ask unanimous consent to proceed for an additional 10 minutes, if necessary?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that, if necessary to conclude his remarks, he may be allowed to proceed for 40 minutes instead of 30 minutes. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and the ladies and gentlemen of the House, for your unanimous consent to address you at this time on the life and character of one of our great Americans.

We have many men who have served our country unselfishly and with great distinction. I would not say any word that might detract from the high places they occupy in the esteem of the American people. Many times opinions of men prove erroneous when formed in the heat of great controversial debates. Just appraisals of their characters and accomplishments can only be made long after their careers have ended. The fullness of time is the safest judge. When our judgments are so made they are never overruled or reversed.

Such judgments have been formed of Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln, and many others. I doubt if there is any Member of this House who holds in higher esteem the memory of Thomas Jefferson than I do. I have said many times, and I wish to repeat here, that Thomas Jefferson rendered to this country many great services, any one of which entitles him to the gratitude of this Republic so long as it shall exist. For instance, his great charter of human freedom, the Declaration of Independence; the proposition that governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed and exist for the benefit of the governed and not the government; the Louisiana Purchase; the establishment of public education through a system of State universities and public schools; as well as others.

I shall avoid reference in my remarks to present-day partisan or political controversial issues; and although I speak to you of one most intimately connected with the great struggle of '61 to '65, it is not my purpose to fight over again that great war, and I shall only refer to some of the matters connected therewith in their historical relations. The genius, courage, and devotion to ideals manifested on land and sea through that great struggle by those who wore the gray as well as those who wore the blue is ample glory to satisfy the sons and daughters of both. I am sure that every loyal American is grateful that Jehovah so guided the affairs of our Nation in that trying hour that we are today a united and not a divided people and Negro slavery is no longer sanctioned in this country.

FASCINATING HUMAN STORY

I do not flatter myself that I can bring anything new to you in relation to this great man. I have heard many eloquent eulogies delivered on the floor of the House and Senate by those from the South as well as the North. Tens of thousands of books and pamphlets have been written; eloquent eulogies have been delivered on every platform and in every forum; teachers, biographers, and historians throughout the world have debated and discussed him; the genius of our great poets, painters, and sculptors have been exhausted. The genealogists have delved deep into his ancestry; the psychologists and moralists have penetrated his innermost mind and laid bare his very soul in their efforts to find the secret of his power and greatness. Perhaps the unborn decades will be necessary to make a full disclosure of this secret and a complete appraisal of his life and character. The fact remains, however, that no human story surpasses in fascination and inspiration the life of Abraham Lincoln.

It is the great human story of the wilderness, of poverty, of disappointment and defeat. It is a story of romance, of pathos, of tragedy, and of greatness crowned with matchless success.

Washington has a place of his own in our minds and hearts as the Father of his Country; Grant, Lee, Sumner, Douglas, Breckinridge, Seward, and others of Lincoln's time, Jefferson, Hamilton, Jackson, Calhoun, Webster, Clay, and others of other times tower like mighty peaks across the years of our history; but Abraham Lincoln, the log cabin boy of the Kentucky hills and the Illinois frontier, in my humble opinion, arises in majestic grandeur above them all, and like the snow-covered and storm-swept crest of Mount Everest, defies all human agencies to explore his heights. He and Washington are the most colossal figures in American life and the most influential on our history.

COWORKER WITH GOD

The great Apostle Paul speaks of us as being colaborers with God. With this thought in mind, cannot we think of Lincoln as one of the great coworkers with God?

God, looking out upon the world in the early morning of the nineteenth century, heard the baying of the bloodhound as he pursued through forest and swamp the fugitive slave; He heard the cries from the pain of the lash; thousands of prayers ascended from the humble cabins to the great white throne; He heard the wail of the black mother when the golden cord of mother and child was rudely broken by the slave trader; He saw the suffering of oppressed millions; He likewise saw the most beautiful flower of his handiwork, your country and mine, in peril; He needed a man to free a race and to save this country.

He did not go to the mansions of the rich, nor to the palaces of the mighty; He went to the hills in the wilderness of old Kentucky and found a mother, noble, pure, and true, and brought forth a son from a log cabin in which there was no floor except the earth; He cradled him in want; He trained him in the hard school of adversity; He taught him the lessons of humanity, tenderness, and love by touching his heart with sorrow; He chastened his mind and soul with defeat and disappointment; He kept him close to Nature and brought him in direct contact with the common people; He placed on his brow the mark of destiny and guided his footsteps in the ways of the infinite.

Was Lincoln not like the Man of Galilee in the surroundings of his birth; like Him in his contacts with the humble and the poor; like Him in disappointment, pain, and suffering; like Him in being a blood sacrifice; and like Him in winning his sublime victory in death?

I speak of him as Kentucky's most distinguished son, the Nation's first and greatest commoner, the world's mightiest champion of freedom, the masterful man of the ages—Abraham Lincoln!

THE MAN OF SORROW AND DISAPPOINTMENT

Abraham Lincoln is remarkable for the sorrows and disappointments he experienced in his life. He was born under most adverse conditions. His father was never able to make a go of life. The family suffered the pangs of poverty. His mother died when he was 9 years of age and his only sister when he was 17 years of age. Think of young Lincoln assisting his father in making a rude coffin for his own dead mother.

After removing to the State of Illinois Lincoln met a beautiful girl by the name of Ann Rutledge. She died before the marriage could take place. Lincoln's grief was so great that many of his friends were fearful he would lose his reason. He said at her grave in after years that her epitaph should read:

Here lies the body of Ann Rutledge
And the heart of Abraham Lincoln.

This characteristic of Abraham Lincoln must be some consolation to all those who have been bereft of a good mother and have loved passionately a gentle, pure, and beautiful woman.

Lincoln was a farmer, rail splitter, surveyor, and merchant. It is said he failed in all of his business ventures.

He knew, too, the sting of political defeat. He lost in his first race for the State legislature, although subsequently he served his district for three terms in that body. He was defeated in his first race for Congress, but later served one term in the National House of Representatives. His record for those 2 years was so out of harmony with the people of his district that when he returned home it was necessary for him to conceal himself for some time to avoid personal violence. He and many of his friends believed that his political career had abruptly come to a close.

He applied for many positions under the Federal Government—Land Office, Governor, secretary of a Territory. He was defeated as the Whig candidate for United States Senator in 1855. He was refused the Republican nomination for Vice President in 1856, and again lost the United States Senatorship in 1858 to that brilliant orator and statesman, Stephen A. Douglas.

For many years he was oppressed by debt. This weighed upon his mind so heavily that he often spoke of it as "the national debt." He did not become relieved of it until he was approaching 50 years of age.

The withdrawal of the South from the Union, the bloodshed, carnage, and grief filled Lincoln's cup of sorrow to overflowing, yet he never wavered in his great purposes. His tragic death was the culmination of nearly 50 years of disappointments and heartaches.

THE MASTER OF ADVERSITY

What an inspiration the life of Abraham Lincoln has been and will continue to be to the struggling ambitious youth of our land! His achievements, compared with his opportunities, fill us with amazement. He had to be content with a few brief months in the primitive rural schools of those days; yet he came to be one of the greatest masters of logic that ever appeared on any American platform. Our country has produced many great masters of oratory—Webster, Calhoun, Clay, Bryan, and others—yet Lincoln is the only American whose speeches have been written in brass and in stone; and one of these speeches adorns the walls of one of Europe's oldest and greatest universities.

It is a far step from the log cabin and poverty in the wilderness in Kentucky to one of the outstanding figures in the 50 centuries of the world's history. From whence did he gather this knowledge and eloquence which made him a master of logic and of speech?

We are told in sacred writ that the truth will make us free. His great soul and mind sought the truth and the light. This led him to be a close student of the Bible, Shakespeare, Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, and the Life of Washington. Here he drank at the fountain of eloquence. Here he found some of the finest and best in science, art, and literature. Above all, here he learned the lessons of righteousness, courage, honesty, patriotism, and nobility of character. He learned true success is service to our Maker and to mankind.

God intended to unite greatness and goodness in men. While the agnostic and the infidel have tried to claim Lincoln for themselves, as a matter of fact, his speeches and his every act disclose that he was a man of deepest religious convictions. It is true that he never united with any church, but he did say:

Show me the church which writes over its portals "Thou shalt love thy God with all thy strength and heart and mind and thy neighbor as thyself", and I will walk a hundred miles to join that church.

Did not the Savior of mankind declare that this is the great commandment? It at once proclaims the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man.

I would earnestly commend to the youth of our land a careful study of all of our great men and women, but this study cannot be complete without mastering the story of Abraham Lincoln. Such study will enlarge their horizon, widen their vision, and strengthen their patriotism. In what other land is it possible for its youth under such handicaps as were met and overcome by Lincoln to reach the high pinnacle of fame and opportunities for service to mankind?

TWO MEN AND TWO SHIPS

In the year 1619 there was landed on the Virginia coast a ship loaded with black men to become slaves, and thus there was planted on our shores the institution of Negro slavery. In the year 1620 another ship, the Mayflower, landed on the rock-bound coast of Massachusetts. It was loaded with oppressed people coming to these shores to seek and establish freedom. Through the years these two mighty opposing institutions and forces spread to other sections—the one over the south and to the west, the other to the north and west.

About the same time that Abraham Lincoln was born in the hills of Kentucky in a log cabin a son was born to a well-to-do family in a more favored section of Kentucky, but not far from the place of Lincoln's birth. Lincoln's father carried him to Indiana and later to the free soil of Illinois. His surroundings developed and strengthened his opposition to Negro slavery. The father of Jefferson Davis carried him to the cotton fields and cane plantations of the South. He was one of the most brilliant men of his time, and he early became the champion of States' rights and Negro slavery. He was the logical leader of the southern Confederacy; and thus Kentucky furnished Abraham Lincoln, the champion of freedom and the Union, and Jefferson Davis, the champion of States' rights and slavery. Those in the hills of Kentucky adhered to the Union; the people of the valleys and plains, the slaveholders, supported the Confederacy.

Webster, Calhoun, Clay, and others with their logic and eloquence for many years attempted to pacify the fears of the Nation, compose the conflicting elements, and check the rising storm, but they could only postpone the day. There came upon the stage others. They knew no compromise. There was no neutral ground. The clouds of discontent, distrust, and discord grew thicker and thicker; the roar of the coming storm could be heard everywhere. Mortal combats occurred in many parts of the Union. There were many great minds arrayed on each side, but no one seemed to be able to diagnose the Nation's disease and point to the remedy. The hour had come for divine Providence's leader, Abraham Lincoln. This giant, gaunt figure arose on the frontier of Illinois, and amid the clash of conflicting interests, the clouds of doubt and uncertainty, and the roar of the passions of angry men diagnosed the Nation's disease and pointed to the remedy when he declared—

A house divided against itself cannot stand. This Nation cannot long endure half slave and half free. I do not expect the house to fall. But I do expect it to cease to be divided.

Lincoln's great mind and great heart worked in unison. He could see the needs of the Nation and at the same time could hear the very heart throbs and the cries of the humble and the poor. He recognized that the great peril to this country was African slavery. He knew human slavery had been indicted by the civilization of the times. We would have to destroy slavery or it would destroy us.

For beauty of diction and compelling oratory the speech of Jefferson Davis on the floor of the United States Senate in defense of States' rights and African slavery has rarely ever been equaled, but he was out of step with American ideals. He was forced to be the special pleader against human rights. On the other hand, Lincoln declared for a great ideal. He voiced the hopes of a new civilization. He became the champion of humanity, freedom, and the Union.

TENDER AND COURAGEOUS

Abraham Lincoln displayed his tenderness, kindly nature, and the bigness of his heart in thousands of instances. His appeal for union and peace in his first inaugural address is one of the finest expressions of magnanimity in the history of the world. He did not appeal to fear but to the higher and nobler sentiments of the leaders of the South. It was like a father to his son who was about to leave the old homestead in anger when he said:

We are not enemies, but friends. We must not be enemies. Though passion may have strained, it must not break our bonds of affection. The mystic chords of memory stretching from every battlefield and patriot grave to every living heart and hearthstone all over this broad land will yet swell the chorus of the Union when again touched, as surely they will be, by the better angels of our nature.

In one wonderful sweep he carried the minds of the southern leaders through the years of sacrifice and suffering from Lexington to Yorktown, over the years of struggle in the second war of independence, to the battlefields of far-off Mexico—yes, to the hundreds of battlefields and countless thousands of patriot graves, in all of which the South gave unstintedly of her treasure and her blood. Would all this suffering, heroism, and sacrifice be in vain? Would they now destroy that which they had contributed so much to create and maintain?

And, again, in that inaugural address:

In your hands, my dissatisfied fellow countrymen, and not in mine is the momentous issue of civil war. The Government will not assail you. You can have no oath registered in heaven to destroy this Government, while I shall have the most solemn one to preserve, protect, and defend it.

Should we not all feel as Lincoln felt, the oath we take as a Member of Congress is registered in heaven. Our hindsight is always better than our foresight. It was most unfortunate that President Lincoln's proposal to give to the slave owners just compensation for their slaves was not adopted and the issue settled around the conference table rather than on the field of battle.

No man who has occupied the White House has been assailed with more bitterness than Abraham Lincoln, and so far as I have been able to learn he never replied in kind. In his second inaugural address he spoke feelingly the words:

With malice toward none and charity for all, let us join together to bind up the Nation's wounds.

There are some who have been led to believe that because of Lincoln's kindness he might be weak and would permit maudlin sentiment to overthrow sound judgment and reason. When right and justice were involved and great issues were at stake Lincoln was bold and as firm as the rock of ages. When warned that his opposition to the extension of slavery and the abolition of slavery would destroy his career, he replied:

Broken by it, I, too, may be; bow to it I never will. The probability that we may fall in a worthy cause is not a sufficient justification for our refusing to support it.

Who ever expressed a faith, courage, and determination more sublime than when Lincoln declared in his second inaugural address?—

Fondly do we hope, fervently do we pray that this scourge of war may speedily pass away. Yet if God will that it continue until all the wealth piled up by the bondman's 250 years of unrequited toil shall be sunk and until every drop of blood drawn with the lash shall be paid by another drawn with the sword, as was said 3,000 years ago, still it must be said that "the judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether."

On another occasion he said he must stand by those who are right and as long as they are right, and forsake those who are wrong, it matters not how large the majority might be.

LIGHTS AND SHADOWS

The great Civil War had dragged through its long and weary 4 years of carnage and bloodshed, with its hate and bitterness. The mystic chords of memory, reaching from every patriot grave, were beginning to touch that finer and better nature of those of the North and of the South. The silver lining of the clouds could be seen. Appomattox had come. General Lee and his men had laid down their arms and were returning to their homes. President Lincoln was happy in his program of conciliation. His uppermost thought was to bring the South back into her former happy relation with the Union at the earliest date possible. He was ready to forgive and to forget. But passion and hate had not entirely spent themselves. They demanded another victim. The cause of freedom and union required another sacrifice—the blood sacrifice of the Emancipator himself. While he was surrounded by friends in the Ford Theater on the night of April 14, 1865, John Wilkes Booth, a half-mad actor, shot him. He was carried to a room across the street, and there, in a small, bare room, amid surroundings not unlike those of his early days, the soul of the Great Emancipator, on the morning of the next day, returned to its Maker and forever sealed the fate of slavery and disunion. Perhaps it took the broken body of Abraham Lincoln to write the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments into the organic law of our land. His dead body bridged the yawning chasm between the North and South. We know now that the malicious charge made by some partisans of the North that the death of Lincoln was the result of a conspiracy among southern leaders was a slander and a libel. Jefferson Davis himself declared "that next to the fall of the Confederacy, the death of Lincoln was the greatest blow the South had received."

It was a calamity to the South as well as to the Nation, and but for the action of this half-crazed actor no doubt this Nation would have been spared the ignominy of the reconstruction days.

On this, the one hundred and twenty-eighth anniversary of his birth, there is naught but love and admiration for the Great Emancipator. His memory is wreathed with the flowers of love, affection, and gratitude of every true American of every creed, of every race and condition of life. He is today—north, east, south, and west—hailed as the deliverer and savior of this Republic in that trying hour. His image is enshrined in the hearts of men and women everywhere who love freedom, justice, and righteousness. Can it not be truthfully said at his grave?—

O Death, where is thy sting;
O Grave, where is thy victory?

The sting of death has been healed with the love and the affection of mankind. His matchless success snatched victory from the grave itself.

JOY IN HEAVEN

If it be true that we live again and the spirits of the departed take note of the affairs of men, can we not vision the martyred President looking out over the battlements of heaven and his unspeakable joy over the progress of our great country? When he took over the reins of this Government on March 4, 1861, there were only 33 States, and these were torn with malice and civil strife, much of it directed against him, and later these States were devastated by war. Today he sees 48 great sovereign States, bound together not merely by the bonds and ties of the Constitution but by the union of the hearts and minds of 125,000,000 Americans, with one flag and one country. He sees our possessions extended far beyond the seas; he sees us the most powerful and the richest country on the earth. The world has never seen another country like ours. It can never see another like it. There is no place on the entire globe out of which there can be carved such another country. There cannot be found the diversity of climate, of soil, of natural resources, of beauty, and, above all, its cultured, peace-loving, and God-fearing people. In the place of envy, malace, and bitterness toward him, he sees today naught but admiration, love, and affection. Cities, counties, highways, avenues, universities, and some part of every conceivable form of honest human activity proudly bear his name. He sees statues, memorials, and monuments erected in his honor in almost every city and town and village, not only in our own land but in every civilized country of the world. His Gettysburg speech, which he believed would not long be remembered, he now sees written in stone on the walls of the magnificent memorial built for him on the banks of the Potomac facing Washington's Monument and the Nation's Capitol. He sees it written in brass on the walls of one of the greatest and oldest universities in a foreign land.

So the world did note and the world did not forget what he said at Gettysburg, because it sets forth the great fundamental principle of free democracy, and he said it with simple, earnest, and burning eloquence that will live forever. He sees the roof of that great memorial supported by 36 pillars representing the 36 sovereign States of the Union at the time of his death. He sees the beautiful statue in Lincoln Park in the Nation's Capital erected by the meager earnings of those from whose limbs he struck the shackles of slavery. The American people contributed of their substance to purchase the original Lincoln farm near Hodgenville, Ky., and to build a great marble memorial over his humble cabin in order to protect it from the ravages of time, so that it might be preserved as an inspiration to the youth of our land.

He saw the President of the United States, the distinguished Senator, John Sharp Williams, from the home State of Jefferson Davis, Secretary of War Newton D. Baker, and Governor Folk, of Missouri, all great Democrats, journey to Kentucky to receive in the presence of a great throng that fine memorial on behalf of the United States, and in most eloquent words pay tribute to one who was born there and later reached the highest pinnacle of fame.

He, too, must see some of the great issues and problems that confront you and me and our country. There are wrongs to be righted, the weak to be defended and protected against the selfish powerful, the great army of unemployed to be found useful work for their hands to do, great industrial and economic problems to be solved, the rich resources and potential wealth of this Nation to be coordinated with the advancement in science so that they may work together as instruments for the welfare of the people of our land, the orderly processes of free government to be upheld, the enemies of our country to be driven from our shores.

These are some of the great tasks for us of the living. Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln, and others lived full and noble lives, and by and through their courage, devotion to duty, and sacrifices have bequeathed to us a most priceless heritage. Let us cherish and preserve it. We see the world divided into two great camps—communism on the one hand and fascism on the other. They both mean violence, oppression, and dictatorships. They are both the enemies of free government. Our country is the great hope of democracy in the world. May we all, and especially the youth of our land, make a new study of the life of Washington, Jefferson, and Lincoln. If we fail to preserve the fundamental principles of freedom as laid down by Washington, Jefferson, and Lincoln, the millions of wonderful men on land and sea, in the air, and under the seas, from Lexington to Flanders Field, will have shed their blood in vain; therefore let us hand down this priceless heritage to our sons and daughters enriched by our own courage, patriotism, and sacrifices, so that in the language of the immortal Emancipator, "under God, government of the people, by the people, and for the people" shall at least not perish from your country and mine. [Applause, the Members rising.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may address the House for 5 minutes.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I very much regret to have to object to the gentleman's request, but it has been previously determined that there would be no business transacted other than the oration of the gentleman who has just left the floor. I have no objection to the gentleman extending his remarks, but to his request to address the House I must object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point with reference to a resolution I have introduced today providing for the permanent preservation of the historic American flag that decorated the President's box at Ford's Theater when President Lincoln was assassinated.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, today we commemorate the birthday of Abraham Lincoln. It seems proper that I should call the attention of the House to a resolution which I have just introduced, inasmuch as it has to do with a historic American flag intimately connected with the life of this great American President, whom we all love and respect.

It is an undisputed historic fact that when J. Wilkes Booth fired the fatal assassin's bullet he jumped from the President's box to the stage of Ford's Theater to make his escape, and in so doing he caught his spur on an American flag which decorated the President's box, thereby sustaining a fractured leg. There is not a Member here who will not agree that that flag should be permanently preserved for posterity and that it should be displayed where those who frequent memorials to Lincoln may readily see it.

I was really astounded when I saw this flag in the Treasury Department Building. I seriously doubt if many of you know that it is there. Nothing has been done for its permanent preservation, and it is displayed in a quite ordinary wooden case on the wall of the north corridor.

The purpose of this resolution, Mr. Speaker, is to authorize and direct the Committee on the Library to inquire into what may be done for the preservation of this famous flag and as to what may be done for having it placed in some shrine, memorial, or museum containing other cherished objects and effects connected with the life of Abraham Lincoln. Every American should know where the flag is located and it should be displayed where all can readily see it.

I feel certain this House will unanimously approve the resolution I have introduced.
